India, Pakistan push talks on gas pipeline from Iran

AFP, New Delhi

India's oil minister told Pakistani Prime Minister Shaukat Aziz yesterday that talks on a proposed gas pipeline from Iran to India through Pakistan should go ahead as part of a push for more regional trade.

"We did repeat what we have said earlier about using Pakistan as transit corridor (for sourcing gas from Iran)," Oil Minister Mani Shankar Aiyar told reporters.

"Notes were exchanged on the gas pipeline issue and the energy security situation in our respective countries."

Aiyar met with Aziz, who arrived Tuesday for his first official visit to India, for 45 minutes and indicated his willingness to push the pipeline proposal with the Pakistani oil minister.

The negotiations on the 1,600-kilometer (1,000-mile) pipeline estimated to cost more than four billion dollars began in 1994, but little headway was made due to tensions between Pakistan and India and the project's massive cost.

However, warming ties between India and Pakistan since April 2003 have revived hopes the project could go ahead.

India could save millions of dollars in gas import costs and Pakistan could meet its own energy needs while earning millions of dollars annually in transit fees, analysts note.

The Indian government has been looking at the alternative of importing the gas by ship, but that would be more expensive.

India, which is able to produce only 30 percent of its energy requirements, has been scouting around the globe for oil and gas sources, including projects in Sudan, Myanmar and Russia. India's appetite for gas has grown following court orders to switch public transport in major cities to the clean-burning fuel instead of diesel.

Indian officials also say another aspect that will need detailed scrutiny is whether the pipeline will have to pass through violence-racked regions of Pakistan before it can enter Indian territory.

Aiyar said the "mutual dependency" being envisioned in the energy sector needed to be replicated in other areas so that there is cooperation in the wider trade and economic relationship."

India granted Pakistan Most Favoured Nation (MFN) status in 1995 but Islamabad has been reluctant to reciprocate, linking trade to settlement of the Kashmir dispute. As a result, Pakistani goods can be exported to India at concessional duty rates, but Indian manufacturers do not get matching privileges.

"The relations between India and Pakistan can not be limited to a few areas. It should form part of wider trade and business relationship and MFN encompasses that," Aiyar said.

Trade between India and Pakistan stands at more than 200 million dollars annually but could easily jump to three billion dollars within a year if the two neighbours open up their markets to each other.

Illegal trade between the two is estimated at around two billion dollars, 10 times more than legal commerce.

End of textile quota spells danger for developing states

Int'l Confederation of Free Trade Unions warns

AFP, Brussels

Tens of millions of people worldwide face dramatic changes when the international quota system for textiles and clothing comes to an end on January 1, 2005, the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions warned Tuesday.

Phasing out quotas could lead to "unfair competition from China" and has already led to "a situation that is creating near-panic in dozens of countries across the globe", the ICFTU charged in a statement.

In a report to be released Wednesday, the group examined the social consequences of a move that would affect roughly 40 million people employed in the sector worldwide, and particularly in developing countries.

"The phasing out of the quota system is predicted to lead to the loss of millions of jobs in countries which are already some of the poorest in the world," the ICFTU said.

In place since the 1970s, the quota system has obliged major international brands to spread orders over a large number of countries such as Bangladesh, Cambodia, the Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Mauritius and the Philippines.

"The lifting of export ceilings will undoubtedly benefit China, which has become highly competitive thanks to its cheap labour, capable of being mercilessly exploited because of the total lack of trade union rights," the group said.

It quoted a World Bank forecast, saying that "China will account for half of the world's clothing exports by 2010," compared with around 25 percent at present.

As a result, "the government of the Philippines stated that its law on the minimum wage would no longer apply to the clothing industry.

"The Bangladeshi government recently announced that it would increase the number of authorised overtime hours and loosen the restrictions on women's night work in order to prepare for 2005."

The ICFTU called on suppliers, sourcing companies, distributors, governments and international bodies "to urgently develop an integrated policy to prevent this drastic loss of millions of jobs in the textile industry".

China warns US on textile import quotas

AFP, Shanghai

China warned the United States Wednesday that any import quotas placed on Chinese textile products will seriously impact bilateral trade ties.

In a statement, the Ministry of Commerce also said it reserved the right to take up the issue with the World Trade Organization (WTO).

The comments follow a decision by Washington to accept an appeal by an inter-governmental lobby group that has demanded the US Department of Commerce restrict certain cotton yarn imports.

The US Committee for the Implementation of Textile Agreements claims that products using a certain type of cotton yarn are disrupting the US market.

Last month, US industry petitioned to limit Chinese imports of socks, bathgowns, bras as well as adding restrictions on cotton and fabric textiles including trousers and shirts, which they alleged are harming domestic manufacturers.

"If the US government allows such momentum despite the facts and WTO rules, it will have a serious impact on bilateral trade and economic ties," commerce ministry spokesman Chong Quan said.

Local Interbank FX Trading
Local interbank FX market was active on Wednesday. Dollar continued to get stronger against Bangladeshi taka on increased demand for import.

Local Money Market
Money market was active. Call money rate continued to ease and ranged between 3:00 and 3:75 percent compared with 3.75 and 4.75 percent previously.

International Market
The dollar plumbed a record low against the euro on Wednesday, as news that Russia may consider boosting the share of euros in its vast foreign exchange currency reserves gave traders another reason to dump the dollar. Higher oil prices also hurt the greenback and a warning issued last week by US Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan about further dollar weakness continued to resonate throughout the market. Greenspan warned that the US deficits were unsustainable and that investor appetite for dollars was bound to dwindle. Dollar also slumped to nine-year low against the Swiss franc.
