US seeks to clear way for China clothing curbs

REUTERS, Washington

The US Justice Department will appeal a federal court ruling that has blocked the Bush administration from considering textile industry requests for emergency restrictions on clothing imports from China, a Justice spokesman said Wednesday.

"We filed a notice of appeal on late Tuesday with the Court of International Trade," said Charles Miller, a Justice Department spokesman.

The action came as textile groups from 54 countries gathered in Washington to urge the United States and other members of the World Trade Organisation to take action to prevent China from dominating the world clothing market.

A quota system that had governed international textile trade for decades expired on Jan. 1, raising fears China will sweep aside other suppliers.

China's huge supply of cheap labor is expected to give it a big advantage in the world textile and clothing market. Competitors around the world complain the Chinese industry also benefits from government subsidies that tilt the playing field in its favour.

"We estimate that there be will over 30 million people unemployed within the next few years if the WTO does not address the China problem," Ziya Suyan, executive director of ITKIB, an association representing Turkish textile and clothing exporters, told reporters.

US textile producers filed a dozen petitions in late 2004 asking the Bush administration to restrict potentially billions of dollars of clothing from China. The petitions assert imports from China will surge after the quotas are gone.

Court of International Trade Judge Richard Goldberg issued an injunction in late December preventing the government from considering those petitions while a case brought against them by textile importers and retailers proceeds.

Those opponents complain a Bush administration panel known as the Committee for the Implementation of Textile Agreements (CITA) violated its own procedures in accepting the petitions based on just the threat of a surge.

They argue WTO rules require actual market disruption occur before safeguard curbs can be imposed.

EU chief rejects US model to revive flagging economy

AFP, Brussels

The head of the European Union's executive arm denied Wednesday he is proposing an American free-market model to revive Europe's flagging economy, saying Europe does not need McJobs.

European Commission head Jose Manuel Barroso, reviled by critics as too close to the United States in his previous life as Portugal's prime minister, said Europe must make its own model stressing social solidarity as much as competition.

"We talk about more jobs and better jobs," he told reporters, presenting his strategic plans for the next five years. "We don't want what are normally called McDonald's jobs."

He noted that the usual criticism of the US economy is that it has undergone a "jobless recovery," where economic growth has not been accompanied by a similar boost in employment.

China open to talk currency at G7 meet

AFP, Beijing

China will call for forex market stability at the upcoming G7 finance ministers meeting but reiterate that it will not succumb to outside pressures to lossen the yuan's peg to the dollar, senior financial officials were quoted as saying Thursday.

Central bank governor Zhou Xiaochuan acknowledged the growing concern over the yuan but said China has been taking gradual measures to relax its control of the capital markets as it became further integrated into the global economy.

"We would like to discuss that issue in the context of international cooperation," Zhou was cited as saying by the China Daily.

"For any country, the exchange rate issue should be decided by the sovereign state," he added.

China has repeatedly pledged to free up its dollar-peg over the last several years but has not indicated a timetable or specific measures, only saying that any eventual loosening of the peg will be gradual and stable.
