destruction that one reads about daily in the media and sees on channel TV and even in the local TV and radio. Talking about the mediums that he had used and the elements that he had touched upon as regards nature, his one single theme of the exhibition, Bashir said," I've used water-colour and oil painting on paper and canvas. I've brought in flowers, leaves, water, land masses, and details of nature around, bringing in colour, form which I have simplified and put into a semiabstract and abstract manner. The forms have been made minimal so that you see flowing and floating shapes of different colours and sizes.' In "Nature-8", water colour, Bashir has brought in the shapes on walls such as the lichen on the wall which has many colours and forms The colours bring in the ruby-red of flowers, the golden hue of the sunshine, the green of the grass and leaves and the blue of the skies and the rivers and ponds. Bashir said. "When the sunshine comes there are many colours in this alone and I've used some of them in my water colour. As the sun rays falls on different elements of nature, different colours and forms emanate. He has I portrayed what he saw before him in the washes of indigo, spotted with vermilion, the washes of yellow-ochre merging with pale blue and other variations of emerald and jade green, along with amber and topaz splashes. The texture work like mosaic or collection of tinted sand is intriguing indeed. The colours do not symbolize anything and the apparent human forms have crept into the composition only accidentally.

"Someone viewing the shapes may take them for human beings, flowers or trees. I leave it all to their imagination," Bashir said, "In abstraction the colours and forms are to bring different feelings in various onlookers. As for my preoccupation with nature. as I walk and move around, look about I am confronted with nature all around me, even though I'm a city dweller. Earlier on, in my joint exhibits. I had used other subjects too but now I've abandoned portraits, landscapes, still life etc .-- after having graduated from the Fine Arts Institute in 1968 in this particular solo venture. Now I teacher at the Teacher's Training College and here I help the teachers to present educational maps, diagrams, charts etc. I teach the lecturers to sketch a bit so as to drive home the points as they are lecturing such as when they are giving a lecture on the geography of Bangladesh. I teach them to draw, for instance the trees, thatched huts and the boats of our country to simplify their lectures. Within the given framework of 45 minutes, a period of a class, I teach the young graduates to function properly with the help of symbols. I've been there for 14 years. Apart from that, I work in my own studio at Jhikatola. In oil on canvas, "Nature -3",

The curling, swirling lines bring in branches of trees and flowers in the form of motifs as well as sunbursts and other simplified delineation of nature. Folk motifs have also entered in other forms such as swirls in the space in between which carry hints of green, pink, yellow, gray, indigo and even russet and gray. Rabindranath Tagore, in his older years, began doodling and then went into painting, when he said 'Earlier, I saw flowering trees and singing birds, but now I do see them as such but as impressions of figures in nature.' Similarly in my works too some forms, which are an integral part of nature, might appear like living beings.

There is a balance of form in "in Nature-1" oil on canvas where one finds shades of brown and beige along with more such hues and forms mingling with green, gold, shades of pink and faded mauve. Bold splashes of white, beige and pale mauve from the centre and sides of the painting." I am alone when I'm sitting somewhere. There are forms of all shapes, sizes and colours around me. I've used a lot of white here to develop the brightness of the composition," Bashir said.

One finds in "Nature-9" a lot of rectangles and triangles of green against more paler jade-colour, touched here and there with strokes of purple, beige, brown, black an lines and squiggles of simplified motifs and bars. This is an oil on canvas. Here the forms and figures that one can trace out, if one stands and lingers around the work, are Cubist in nature.

Another oil on canvas, "Fish-1", we see swimming fish in once again simplified shapes, with most of them clustering to the top, while many swim in various directions in their beautiful shades of beige, mauve, brown and gray. They are seen against blue, mauve and pink shades mingling with the white of the water and have minute texture work to lend interest to the composi-
