Myths and legends in paints

Abdus Shakoor's solo venture at "Shilpangan"

FAYZA HAQ

BDUS Shakoor, whose exhibition of nostalgic paintings of myths and legends began at the "Shilpangan" recently, said, "An artist does not worry about whether his paintings will sell well or not. He is out to express his innermost feelings and inspirations as well as his environment in the way he best can. First of all, he will try to find joy in his work. The entire fine arts section holds a mirror to our society and within this one can represent the beauty and grandeur of a country in the best possible manner. When I first began to paint with the subjects of stories from the past. I came across Girish Chandra Sen's 'Mymensingh Gitika' which is taught at the Bangla Department everywhere in our country, and there reading to increase my knowledge and enjoy the treasure trove of romantic stories based on the past of the region. I felt I should stop my range of experimentation. I believed that I could paint in the manner of Quamrul Hassan, bringing in the beauty of our villages and our traditional Bengali art, influenced by Jamanini Roy. "This idea came to me in 1991 and to gather my materials I visited various museums such as the Gurusahdai Datta Museum in Kolkata, where I realized how rich was our traditional art in Bangladesh. That is why I write some of the stories along with the painting so that the inscriptions become an integral part of the paintings. However, the paintings do not emanate from the writings. Thus the poems of Mymensing such as 'Naderchand', 'Molua, 'Mohua' 'Chandraboti' and 'Rupoboti' and such characters enter my paintings. Forinstance. 'Mohua' was under the control of the gypsies and her connection with 'Naderchand' comes to such a head that she is driven to kill 'Naderchand' and such incidents which I have shortened and minimized in my works. I have in particular, brought in the faces of the protagonists of the stories and have used dark colours such as blue and black for delineating the faces of my heroines as village girls are different from their city counterparts and tend to have darker hues as they are more exposed to the sun and do not have as many facials as urban women do. Also, the darker hues adds drama and strength to the paintings, I believe. If you limit your colours in modern paintings, I am to understand, it appears more rich. Thus I have used dark hues to delineate both men and women in my works."

Dwelling on whom he was guided by as he went about his creative work, Shakoor said, "When I studied at a Bogra village, I painted as my instincts told me. The 'melas' and the other festive functions at that time brought me in contact with simple clay and wooden toys and dolls that still enter into my paintngs. When I went to study at Baroda, India, I had KG Subramanium as my teacher, and he guided me in 1976-1978 and he too stressed on the fact that I should economize my colours, lines and forms. He told me that within a short time, I would be able to make good paintings if I followed those instructions and guidelines. Even today, the influence of this teacher is seen in my works.'

Asked if he considered his Bangla writings that go along with his paintings as Bangla calligraphy, Shakoor said that they were simple writings like footnotes to his works and were no attempts at elaborate intertwining of lettering as one finds in formal calligraphy. Elaborating on the content matter of his works. Shakoor said. that he concentrates on what he sees around him in his country and what he knows to be the cultural heritage of our people. I select what is necessary from the vast treasure of Bengali folklore. He wrote where it was necessary and left space where he felt it was adequate to do so for the sake of the composition. Similarly he brought in figures where he deemed it fit. When he draws his basic sketches, he does not ponder over what colours to put so that they flow freely from his memories, imagination and inspirations. He feels that I has the brushes and paints before him, and the hues and shades enter the paper automatically. As for the brightness of the choice of colours at items, Shakoor wishes to maintain the simplicity of child-like paintings though he does not follow the Naïve School. The colours of the traditional painters tend to influence the choice of the selection of colours

-- they are bright to the point of raw attimes

Asked how this exhibit at "Shilpangan" was different from those he has held before. Shakoor said that he had included some drawings on pastel colours based on his visit to European countries. such a Denmark and England and they are even more simplified than his normal style. The subjects too varied as they brought in blonde young women and men with punk hairstyles. These are drawings on coloured paper where the drawing has been done with black lines. At times a few other hues were added to draw out the figures. It was Faiz Ahmed who insisted that these items should be included in the exhibit. Thus he has captured the west too in my most recent works.

Talking about whether he was surprised at receiving a prize at the most recent National Exhibition held by the Bangladesh Shilpakala Academy, as they often tend to ianore the efforts of the older generation of painters who have been working consistently and deserve as much recognition as the vounger artists who tend to experiment. Shakoor said that he was not overwhelmed at all because he feels that if Shilpakala Academy does not encourage someone who has been experimenting and working steadily for decades, it would be a pity. The artist added that it is true that sometimes prizes at the national and international level. given by the Shilpakala Academy, do go suddenly and strangle enough to some young men who have made some outrageous experimentation and does not have vears of persistent good work behind him/her. An artist's contribution towards the promotion of the culture of the country and his years of labour as well as his intrinsic excellence should be kept in mind before prizes of such importance are handed out, Shakoor believed. There are contributions of an artist as a teacher should also be considered and should carry weight, he said. "Sure," he added, "bold and unusual experimentation should also have its recognition."

Talking about the prizes that he had won earlier, Shakoor recounted the won three prizes in Japan, and two or three times from local authorities such as the Shilpakala Academy, "Bata International" etc. However he adds, that prizes and public acclaim do not make a painter. He himself has been experimenting in his own manner since 1976 and has been teaching since 1970 at a Sylhet Cadet college where he found the remuneration there well enough to carry on with his work and the indigenous people at Sylhet inspired him in his work. He has been working at the Fine Arts Institute, in the Crafts Department since 1980. It is from 1996 that he began the work on Mymensingh folklore that sets him apart from most other painters

Asked if he felt that the mushrooming of the galleries in Dhaka is helping boost the sale of the average painters, Shakoor said, that this was definitely so as when he first graduated it was very difficult to sell one's painting and when it did sell it was for a very low price like Tk 200 in the 60s and early 70s. He added that artists did not have enough money at that item to get adequate paints and brushes. 'Today," Shakoor said, "even young painters can make a living somewhat with selling their paints quite often and do not necessarily have to resort to commercial work in addition, to get by. Only recently groups of exhibitions have gone to Paris, Norway and UK and this is surely promising for a better future for our artists. We have these facilities because we are a free country.

Dwelling on whether an artist can make a living by painting alone, Shakoor said that this is possible but an artist can never become rich with it, unless he goes overseas or is fortunate to have the backing of rich patrons. He himself teaches along with his work. He says that he teaches first, to survive, and than paints at his leisure time. He enjoys mixing with young artists and exchanging views and opinions. He believes that even if he can train up two artists well enough and they manage to establish themselves, that itself is an achievement. Since Zainul Abedin, Shafiuddin and Qayum Chowdhury could combine their teaching with their own paintings I think that others like me can do the same too. He paints in a room in the University quarters: at first he makes a lot of drawings with pencil; next he applies paints in a group and then elaborates on each with time. He works for an hour in the morning before teaching and then at evening or at night, as his whim takes him, listening to folk songs at the same time. Shakoor adds the wordings later.

Talking and examining the paintings with their stress on folk motifs such as birds, elephants, horses, snakes, lizards, heads of legendary characters taken from myths and romances, and depicted with flat dramatic colours, with fascinating elaboration with motifs here and there, made one "high" with mental satisfaction.
