New scenes from New York

CULTURE

Andreas Herzau's exhibition at Goethe Institut

FAYZA HAQ

HEN Andreas Herzau went to New York city it was for the first time for him and he was a stranger there. At 38, he did not want to go to Manhattan for the first time. He began taking pictures of the city because of the most banal, and probably the best prerequisite for artistic work. He had, at that time only two days left. He began early in the morning and went through the city which he had earlier found too busy and close to deal with photographically. Recently an exhibition of his photographs was songs. For him the city is foreign and only the geometry of the models of New York are familiar to him. Herzau was not there during the 11th September tragedy. The photographer wants to arouse the feelings when the mass murders are not in Rwanda, Iraq, Sierra but in the front door.

The city appears to bear the message "Get lost: don't read me. Herzau shows the changes after the modern catastrophe. The Disney field is an apocalypse-like landscape where the foreigner meets the city face to face.

In one of the photos at the Goethe Institut gallery we see a car held at the Goethe Institut

In the past year Herzau was in Manhattan six times and every time he went for seven to fourteen days New York through the events of 11th September was not an open city. For Herzau it was a city of walls, fences, iron bars where netting and lines prevent one for seeing clearly.

Most of the New York photographers like Helen Levitt, William Klein and Garry Winogrand have taken photographs of Manhattan as if they were going though some sport of boxing and before whom unfolded a huge human panorama. Herzau does not romanticize New York nor blend it with Frank Sinatra at an angle and from it we see a woman's leg in the process of stepping down from the car. We see very little else except the street at the side with spots of gray upon lighter gray and some dirt. In another picture we see the feet that of a child and of an adult. There is a shade of a fence falling and the mark of a man's outline in white as one makes when there has been a murder on the streets or this could be a mark to tell people that this is a signal for walking. We get the impression of other people walking across. In another photo we see the hips, waist and breast of a woman and her hand and some people walking past. Another picture brings the hands of a man as he tries to get the feel of a mannequin in a shop. This is reflected on a mirror and we see some people walking past as well as some cars. Another photo brings a woman with a bag fixing her shoe as she is about to cross the street. Next to her is a lamp post and steps leading off. Another picture brings in a man with sun glasses, hat and a jackets. Beyond him is perhaps an island with boats and tops of some buildings. The next picture shows two cops, one in a light shaded uniform and another in a dark one. Included are also some images of teenagers although it is not clear what they have to do with the police. These picture hang from a building and in between is a road with some skyscrapers to the left. In another picture we see some people at a resort. On a raised platform are people sitting, walking or simply standing. Right in front are the dark silhouettes of two people with caps trying to cross over. In another picture is a section of a machine through which you can see boats, ships, the Statue of Liberty, men on deck watching the world go by. Another picture is with some colour, for a change, and this in between. Here you see men hanging out. The jostling and crowding in a bus is brought into another picture is probably a night club scene where the skimpily clad woman dancing. There are red lights all over with spots of blue and yellow

where people are scrambling to get hold of the metal rod to support themselves in the milieu . A man and woman are clearly seen clinging on while the faces of others have also been captured as they cling on to the rod for support while the bus moves on. There is another picture of a woman wearing clothes with sequins. Her figure appears to merge with that of a man who is smiling and looking down. This picture is taken against buildings which have nothing to speak for themselves except cemented bits and glasses. The crossed backs of two people in the armed forces, perhaps in the navy, are brought into focus in one photo while another picture there are again some men, most probably from the navy, talking and laughing with each other, while the questioning face of a woman looks on at them.

In another presentation we see tall houses, some gray, blue and burnt sienna and in between is a row of bright cones that divide the street while some sort of work is in progress. The picture is shot from behind one of these conical objects which appears somehow as tall as the buildings. The next photo brings the leg and foot of a man crossing a metallic part of a road, by the side of a pavement. Another picture brings the Manhattan Island over which sea gulls are flying. This is seen against metallic bits of a partition. In between the squares one sees the island. A poster wanting the capture of Osman Bin Laden is somehow seen against the US flag. This is seen against a shop welling jewellery, specially necklaces with stones.

Andreas Herzau who was born Mainz in 1962 was educated in typography and typesetting at Tubingen. He worked as apolitical editor of "Neuer Konkret Verlag" Hamburg and as freelance author for different newspapers in German. He was a member of the 'Signum" and of "laif". He taught photography at the University of Bielefeld. Herzau was awarded the "Euro
