SADYA AFREEN MALLICK

HEN I went to see Nilufar Yasmeen a month back, she was under the supervision of the doc-tors at BIRDEM. She was extremely weak and could hardly raise her head. As she sat on a chair with her face downwards I avoided disturbing her. Her attendant informed me that they were planning to go to Bangkok for further treatment. I was hopeful that she would be better after that trip and I would be able to come back and see her. I hadn't realised that this would be the last time I would see her. Nilufar Yasmeen was one of the renowned singers of our country. She began her career as a vocalist of modern songs. Gradually she ventured into the depths of classi-cal music and the full variety of Nazrul songs ranging from Hamd, Nath, Bhajaan, Kirtaan, Thumree and Kheyaal. Nilufar was equally adept in songs of Atul Prosaad Sen, and DL Rai. She always preferred songs with a rich classical base.

Nilufar had the rare gift of mes-merising the audience with her voice. The lyrics, rhythm, and tunes which she rendered went beyond mere entertainment. Her renditions were mostly filled with pathos and would rarely compromise with songs which had little depth. In fact, she was one of the most active proponents of preserving the original tunes of Nazrul and followed the swaralipi and original tunes thoroughly. She was an active member of the Nazrul Shangeet Shilpi Shongstha.

I got to know Nilufar apa quite intimately back in 1984 when we toured Calcutta along with a small troupe of Nazrul Shangeet singers. Leading artists of Nazrul songs of West Bengal and Bangladesh had participated at the festival. As events would have it, we grew close and at one point my family, along with Nilufar Yasmeen, shifted to a historical house where Tagore had written his famous poem Nirjhorer Shopno Bhongo.

The more I interacted with her, the more I realised that I had come across an artist who was totally devoted to music. She was frank in her thoughts and helpful in her deeds. There was never any doubt that music was her love and she all proud.

Nilufar Yasmeen had been suffering from the deadly cancer for the past few years. But nothing could keep her away from her music. Only a few months ago while we were recording a song at the studio, everyone noticed her seemingly falter. Even when I met her at the Savar Smriti Shoudho while recording a song for the Nazrul Day she seemed frail and exhausted. She sat under the shade of a big tree. Even though it was an unusually sultry day, nothing could keep her away from her love for songs. She performed for the last time at Trishal on May 29, with us at would happily spend hours rehearsing her songs or simply the birth anniversary of Nazrul last After our performance (she had

As I walked up to her house to pay my last respect, it was difficult to miss the tremendous sense of loss and pain felt by her family, friends, colleagues and admirers. My heart aches at the thought that it will possibly take years before our country can produce another artist as talented, sincere and devoted to music as Nilufar Yasmeen. May she rest in peace and her songs live-on for generations to come.

Indeed she had and she made us

HARUN UR RASHID OR the first time in the country, an exhibition of feminist cartoons has been organised to observe the event since March 8 at the Drik Gallery.

Exhibition

Jointly held by Drik Gallery and Oxfam-GB, Bangladesh, the weeklong exhibition is displaying about eighty cartoon works by twenty-six cartoonists, both male and female, from seven countries of the world. Cartoon as a means of artistic expression is widely regarded a very strong materiel of protest and criticism. Humorous in nature, as it is, cartoon affects its subject through merciless ridicule. And the humour chiefly lies in the befitting caricature of the subject. The caricature, often along with accompanying dialogues or comments, composes the 'say' of the cartoon But it has been observed that cartoons are often anti-women in nature. Either they project women as consumer or as greedy, seductive, silly and seducer. Even the bodylines of women figures in cartoons reflect the sexist, gender segregated notion of the body. The practice has been embedded into our existing patriarchal system. The ongoing exhibition aims at raising a debate around this practice as well as a campaign against in media. The exhibits at the show mostly present protest against numerous patriarchal treatments of women in different social settings of the world. The cartoonists include from the US, India, Pakistan, Sri Lanka, Nepal, Nigeria and the host Bangladesh. The subjects of the cartoons range from women's treatment in family level to national, even to international level. Cartoons related to international affairs, like the US campaign for war against Iraq, for example, have also earned rooms in the exhibition.

Cartoonist Shishir Bhattacharya's cartoons reveal the denigrating treatment of women at the national level. In one piece he depicts a procession celebrating the Women's Day, where, ironi cally, all participants are male. And the faces of the men are also suspi in promotional activities like TV commercials, advertisements etc.

The piece shows a woman, yulgarly dressed like the heroines in contemporary Bangla films, acting in an advertisement of biri--a country-made smoking product. Lisa also attacks the fundamentalist

religious system of dividing land

Cartoons say 'Yes' to women

Cartoonists from seven countries observe the International Women's Day

cion arising, for they look very much like the antisocial. In another work Shishir sketches the general expectation of the common people. A poor woman is seen dreaming in her sleep that the two leading party-leaders are celebrating Eid together.

Shishir's most ironical blast, however, is again unleashed against the men: in this cartoon he shows one of the organisers leaving the scene after lifting a woman, a feminist activist, on to a dais to celebrate Women's Day.

Tahmina Hafiz Lisa, a Bangladeshi, has ridiculed the popular practice of using women whose figure is 'fashionably' slender, asks a poor woman who is all skin and bone, 'Do ya know slim is out and skinny is in?'

The exhibition displays some of Maya Kamath's works. The deceased Indian cartoonist's speculation even ridicules Hamlet. or William Shakespeare for that matter, for that much-quoted utterance, 'Frailty, thy name is woman.' The cartoon shows a woman burdened with a lot of children of all sizes and ages, struggling hard to maintain all the ousehold chores.

Kamath's feminism also covers the national-political level. In one such piece a woman MP is seen proposing in the parliament '33% reservation for men in household chores....' Another of her cartoons lashes hatred against those who protested the presentation of Phoolan Devi in the film Bandit Queen, while they keep their own women at home under severe oppression.

property among the inheritors, in Indian cartoonist, V. which women get much less than Ramchandran Iyer, lashed his attack on the US President George Indian cartoonist Shekhar W. Bush for his reckless promise of waging war against those so-called terrorist countries.

> Famous Pakistani cartoonist Chaudry Rafique Ahmed Feica comes with some brilliant pieces that mainly project the need for mutual bond of cooperation and understanding between man and woman.

From Nepal have come a group of cartoonists, who work for a Nepalese publishing concern called 'Asmita'. There are artists also from the Cartoonist Club of Nepal. The There are also works by three American cartoonists -- Trina Robbins, Anne Timmons, and Brian Rumbolo. Robbins and Timmons jointly bring out the famous comic book called GoGirl!, which has won the Lulu Award recently.

The renowned female photojournalist of the country Saveeda Khanum inaugurated the exhibition on the International Women's Day. The exhibition can also be availed on line at www.drik.net/Feminist-Cartoon/
