US insiders say Iraq intel deliberately skewed

REUTERS, Washington

A growing number of US national security professionals are accusing the Bush administration of slanting the facts and hijacking the $30 billion intelligence apparatus to justify its rush to war in Iraq.

A key target is a four-person Pentagon team that reviewed material gathered by other intelligence outfits for any missed bits that might have tied Iraqi President Saddam Hussein to banned weapons or terrorist groups.

This team, self-mockingly called the Cabal, "cherry-picked the intelligence stream" in a bid to portray Iraq as an imminent threat, said Patrick Lang, a former head of worldwide human intelligence gathering for the Defense Intelligence Agency, which coordinates military intelligence.

The DIA was "exploited and abused and bypassed in the process of making the case for war in Iraq based on the presence of WMD." or weapons of mass destruction, he added in a phone interview. He said the CIA had "no guts at all" to resist the allegedly deliberate skewing of intelligence by a Pentagon that he said was now dominating US foreign policy.

Vince Cannistraro, a former chief of Central Intelligence Agency counterterrorist operations, said he knew of serving intelligence officers who blame the Pentagon for playing up "fraudulent" intelligence, "a lot of it sourced from the Iraqi National Congress of Ahmad Chalabi.'

The INC, which brought together groups opposed to Saddam, worked closely with the Pentagon to build a for the early use of force in Iraq. "There are current intelligence officials who believe it is a scandal," he said in a telephone interview. They believe the administration, before going to war, had a "moral obligation to use the best information available. not just information that fits your preconceived ideas.

Report 'simply wrong' The top Marine Corps officer in Iraq, Lt. Gen. James Conway, said on Friday US intelligence was "simply wrong" in leading military commanders to fear troops were likely to be attacked with chemical weapons in the March invasion of Iraq that ousted Saddam. Richard Perle, a Chalabi backer and member of the Defense Policy Board that advises Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld, defended the fourperson unit in a television interview. 'They established beyond any doubt that there were connections that had gone unnoticed in previous intelligence analysis," he said on the PBS NewsHour Thursday.

A Pentagon spokesman. Marine Lt. Col. David Lapan, said the team in question analysed links among terrorist groups and alleged state sponsors and shared conclusions with the CIA.

Powell said Friday his presentation was "the best analytic product that we could have put up.'

Shaped 'from the top down'

Greg Thielmann, who retired in September after 25 years in the State Department, the last four in the Bureau of Intelligence and Research working on weapons, said it appeared to him that intelligence had been shaped "from the top down."

'The normal processing of establishing accurate intelligence was sidestepped" in the runup to invading Iraq, said David Albright, a former UN weapons inspector who is president of the Institute for Science and International Security and who deals with US intelligence officers.

Anger among security professionals appears widespread. Veteran Intelligence Professionals for Sanity, a group that says it is made up mostly of CIA intelligence analysts, wrote to US President George Bush May 1 to hit what they called "a policy and intelligence fiasco of monumental proportions." "In intelligence there is one unpardonable sin -- cooking intelligence to the recipe of high policy," it wrote. "There is ample indication this has been done with respect to Iraq.'

Association (BOGSOA) Sayeed Hossain Chowdhury however claimed that the situation would become normal within a few weeks.

He said traders should not worry because a lot of other foreign operators and main line operators would come forward to carry goods from Bangladesh.

The BOGSOA in a letter to Prime Minister Khaleda Zia yesterday said the local liners can meet the demand if they are given three facilities. These are reintroduction of preferential berthing facility to local liners at the ports, making the cut-off time for container handling open and formation of a committee to take emergency steps to solve any problem. Garments exporters fear their business would suffer heavily unless the Bangladesh Flag Vessel (Protection) Ordinance, 1982 is repealed.

The foreign feeder vessel operators under the umbrella of the Chittagong Feeder Trade Committee (CFTC) suspended operation following the government's decision to enforce the ordinance.

The ordinance stipulates all foreign vessel operators to get waiver certificates from the Principal Office of Mercantile Marine Department every time they go for loading or unloading goods.

"This ordinance should be cancelled or withdrawn immediately," said Quazi Moniruzzaman, president of the Bangladesh Garments Manufacturers and Exporters Association (BGMEA). "It would not only jeopardise the garments sector but other industries as well."

"If this situation continues, no buyer would come to Bangladesh,' said Zinnat Ali Mian, second vicepresident of the BGMEA.

"If my consignment is not shipped today, I will have to bring it back from the port and send it by air at an extra cost of Tk 18 lakh," said Tipu Munshi, managing director of Sepal Garments

The BGMEA has called an emergency press conference today on the possible impact of the situation

The BGMEA also plans a strong movement against the ordinance. It would urge the major chamber bodies including the Federation of Bangladesh Chambers of Commerce and Industry to lend it a hand.

A proposal to scrap the ordinance was put up at a cabinet meeting a few weeks ago only to be rejected.

The shipping ministry is scrutinising clauses of the ordinance for possible changes to end the stalemate.
