Budgetary Discipline and Fiscal Programme The forum said fiscal balance, as well as the BOP, improved perceptively during FY02 and FY03. While some of these came about through conscious policy choices, a large part of the adjustment took place by default, since the Annua Development Programme (ADP) could not be fully implemented. 'This influenced positively the fiscal balance and the government's need to borrow. Similarly, the BOF improved due to import drop, in a period of export slowdown, and the role of different factors in enhancing the remittance flow," a discussant said.

"Whatsoever, the fundamental weaknesses of public finance remain in place. These largely include low revenue effort with marginal share of direct tax, rigid revenue expenditure structure along with low quality of many ADP

To make the new money loan court law effective, it was suggested that all parties concerned including bank management and officials in particular should play the key role.

The speakers, however, suggested bank management take step for an out-of-court settlement and not to reschedule default loans more than twice.

They said although there is scope for making further corrections, many of the prescriptions pursued by the donors are 'tough and difficult to accommodate.

Criticising the performance of nationalised commercial banks (NCBs), the participants said even the central bank does not have the disclosures and audit reports of these state-owned banks.

Information and Communication Technology

The forum urged the government to allocate one per cent of the GDP to harness the information communication technology (ICT) sector as an anti-poverty tool

They also called for deregulating state-owned Bangladesh Telegraph and Telephone Board (BTTB) liberalising its international gateway for private sector participation establishing a level playing field for both public and private telecom operators and giving greater latitude to the telecom regulatory body.

Corruption and Judiciary

Change in political leaders' attitude and will and combined efforts by political parties, civil society and administration are required to fight corruption and improve the judiciary, the discussants said.

They felt transparency in administration and public service system was a prerequisite to ensure good governance and a corruption-free society.

"Corruption is a social cancer. If we are to address corruption, we have to start from the very top of the administration," a discussant said.

Administrative reform and ocal Government

The forum said administrative reforms remained stagnant as successive governments reneged on their election pledges, exposing the lack of commitment of political parties

It urged the government to revive the upazila system to get rid of the bureaucratic grip on the local bodies. The forum observed although major political parties had common policy and strategy on some burning issues like independent anticorruption commission, separation of the judiciary from the executive and human rights commission, they were continuously slipping on their election pledges.

The speakers urged civil society members to press the government to delivering its election pledges. Reforms in administration are
