Melody makers from the land of Mozart

Members of the Linos Ensemble speak their minds

RESSED in stark black, with only a touch of ver-milion in the pianist's of their shirts, the Linos Ensemble, organised by the Goethe Institut, soothed the nerves of Dhaka concert enthusiasts. The venue was Osmani Memorial Hall and it was not just the expatriates who enjoyed Mozart, Schubert, Francaix and Muller-Siemens pieces that were presented there recently. Even children under ten listened with rapt attention to the five presentations (including the encore). The gentle, wondrous compositions brought in pristine concert music notes from the 18th century Germany and France to the modern times. The programme included "Variations on a Lander by Franz Schubert" by Detlev Muller-Siemens, "Quintet in A 'The Trout' op. 11ph.", "Piano Quintet in E flat, KV452" by Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, and "Dixtuor" by Jean Francaix. Konstanze Fickhorst (pianist) and Konstanze Eickhorst (pianist) and Jorg Linowitzki (bass player) speak to The Daily Star, sitting at a local

The Daily Star: What brought the group, "Ensemble Linos", together and what instruments did

Konstanze Eickhorst: It is the oboe player, Klaus Becker, who is the founder of the ensemble: some of the members who played with the ensemble at the first time were studying together, meeting with youth orchestras, because it was 25 years ago that the group was formed. We had recently a big celebration in Cologne in March this year to mark our beginning The foundation members used to know each other from studying or playing together. They eventually got together to play chamber music in Germany, other parts of Europe and overseas, as in this occasion, in important cities of the Jorg Linowitzki: We all come from different parts of Germany; some of us met in youth competitions; we decided to play together. There are eleven of us here tonight at Dhaka. We play the string quintet, violin, viola, cello, double bass, and wind instruments that include flute, oboe, clarinet bassoon, French horn and the piano.

TDS: Was music in everyone's family; did your parents ever object to taking up music as your careers?

IL: In most cases, no. However, the parents of the performers were always very interested in music and so allowed us to study music. Germany has a very old tradition of music that goes back to the middle ages and beyond. Today in our country we have over a hundred orchestras and 23 universities for music and many music schools.

TDS: What was your incentive to take up music as your professions? JL: The idea of playing chamber music together with a wonderful repertoire formed the group. With the eleven in the ensemble with our various instruments we can produce nearly any kind of western chamber music. We sometimes get a trumpet or trombone to play with us so that we get further variations in our symphonies. There are not a lot of big chamber music groups such as we are. It is not easy for us to get together as we are a large group; we are working in periods;

times we'll come back to the subcontinent and talk to the musicians from this region too, hopefully. We've heard music of the subcontinent, with the sitar, sarodh, tabla etc. and have been exposed to the fusion of Ravi Shankar and the Beatles, which we find wonderful.

TDS: Can you say something about your present tour?

JL: We began in Mumbai, went to New Delhi, Kolkata and after Dhaka we'll to Chennai, Colombo and Karachi, and then we'll go back. We arrived yesterday, saw the parliament building and a part of the capital city, apart from playing this evening, and our flight tomorrow is a very early one.

TDS: Do you care for pop, rock, metal, rap, jazz or the blues?

KE: When there is good music

The Linos Ensemble performing at the Osmani Memorial Hall

we live all over Germany. We aren't just playing together: we get together as friends to enjoy each other's company TDS: Do you think that western and eastern notes can be combined in a satisfactory fusion -- is yes, was are the examples that you can site? KE: We are interested in eastern music and would love to know more about it. We have very little time and cannot fit in workshops or even meet musicians from the subcontinent in our present tour: exchange of arts would be interesting and exciting. We came here to present our western music, which is dear to our hearts, and maybe find an audience that loves it too.

JL: When we'd gone to China, we had workshops, where we talked to students of music: maybe somelike jazz or the songs of the Beatles one naturally laps up such music. The songs of Madonna or Michael Jackson or even Elton John are not quite our type of music: in them something is missing for us. They lack the soul pitch, in a way, although there are thousands who ove them.

TDS: Would you say that German chamber music is a thing

KE: I wouldn't say that it is something so different from music from other parts of Europe but I think it was the centre of music at the time of Bach, Mozart, Beethoven and Schubert. We were lucky to have such genius in our country. The French have their Debussy and

TDS: Isn't all the travelling in your tours disruptive for your personal

KE: We once made a decision in the ensemble that we'll not have a concert tour for more than two and a half week because of our family lives. The number of times a year that we hold our tours depend on demand. Our normal concert life is mostly confined to Germany. We often go to Europe and our international tours are only from time to TDS: Apart from the subcontinent where all has the ensemble been to and who pays for the trips?

JL: We went to several countries in Europe such as Austria, France, Spain, Italy, the Netherlands etc. We had a long trip of China; we went to Indonesia, Vietnam, the Philippines. This trip is organized by the Goethe Institut, who we believe are doing a good job all over the world. The concert goers pay

TDS: Do you feel that you're a success because your listeners are expatriates or members of the upper echelons of society in the JL: I don't know who comes to the concerts but I believe that they like to be there. I know some peo ple prefer to listen to pop and rock music and melodies of such streams. I believe that even in Bangladesh there are ardent enthusiasts of chamber music: the hall was full. We'd like to reach our to the average run of the mill person too but we don't get the time or opportunity.

TDS: You combine teaching with performing; is this out of compulsion or do you enjoy this?

KE: We need the combination. We're better teachers when we know how life is on stage. We're better performers when we get the time to discuss with our students how to get things ready for the TDS: What kind of life is that of a musician in the west: do you get enough patronage and can you make a comfortable living?

KE: In Germany we're privileged and happy in our jobs in our generation. Our students will have more trouble getting good jobs because the state of Germany tends to have less and less money

JL: We made our hobby our jobs: what could be better?

TDS: What is your advice to the students of music -- is it luck practice or talent that makes you'

KE: It is a combination of all three that makes you a sure success: talent is not enough -- you must practice like mad.

PALLAB BHATTACHARYA, New

WARDS are raining on actress Kiron Kher, wife of leading film personality and the head of India's film censor board Anupam Kher.

When Kiron got the national award for best actress for her role in internationally-acclaimed Bengali director Rituparno Ghosh's film could think that recognition for her would come so quickly again for someone who embarked on celluloid career so late in her life.

Yet, the reality is that in the space of three months beginning this August, Kiron was adjudged the best actress at two prestigious international film festivals in Locarno, Switzerland, and Cape Town in South Africa this time for her performance in lead role in a multi-national production film Khamosh Pani (Silent Waters) by Pakistani debutant director Sabiha

Winning the award for Bariwali was undoubtedly quite an achievement for Kiron, a Sikh who had migrated from Pakistan part of Punjab province, who spent more than a year learning Bengali so that she can dub her dialogues herself for the film.

That apart, in Bariwali, Kiron comes out with flying colour por-traying the difficult role of a woman in a closed world opening up to emotions and unfulfilled relationship with a man.

Bariwali is the story of a middleaged woman Bonolata who lives alone in a sprawling house with two servants after the man she was to marry died of snakebite two days before the wedding. Bonolata's prosaic life sparks up with the arrival of a film shooting unit whose director (the role played by Bengali actor Chianjit Chakravarty) who likes to use her house as a locale She agrees to let her house to be used for that purpose and in the process a relationship develops between her and the director. The film ends on a note of failure for Bonolata when she realizes that the director only wanted to use her emotionally as well as and her house for the shooting. Kher's portrayal of the rise and Ayesha was drawn from what I had ebb of emotions of a woman in solitude and emotional vulnerabilheard from my family-members of the tragedy of the Partition, says ity at the sudden exposure to a man Kiron. That apart, the treatment of has drawn unanimous praise from the subject also made the actress excited about the role in the film,

Director Sabiha Sumar says to choose the story was that although the subject of Partition has come up in a number of films, the issue of kidnapped women and their plight has not been openly dealt with

The film was shot in a Pakistani Three years down the line and village when relations between nternational awards came to India and Pakistan were in a high Kiron in Locarno Festival in August state of tension following the terrorist attack on Indian Parliathis year when she shared the Silver.
