State Minister for Land Rashed Mosharraf visited the area. After his visit, a project was undertaken to develop Nilsagar into a bird sanctuary and Tk 80.05 lakh was granted for the purpose.

This is the beginning of the destruction, Sushil said.

The project implementing authorities drastically felled age-old trees without considering the aspect of ecological balance, he

Five years ago, noted bird watcher and specialist Dr Zakin Hossain, had cautioned at a meeting not to plant saplings of foreign origin. Guest birds prefer local and familiar trees to alien unfamiliar ones as their shelters. Birds also development of the area into a consume insects growing on local trees, he had said.

But his warning went unheeded, resulting in an ecological imbalance.

During 2001-2002, the then district administration who was the custodian of Nilsagor, turned it almost barren by felling a large number of trees, Sushil lamented. Felling of trees went on former Union Parishad chairman of the area, Rafiqul Islam, claimed that live trees were not felled 'Only dead trees were removed" hesaid

Amid the claims and counterclaims, the area has lost its scenic beauty and bird sanctuaries.

A recent survey also revealed that menace of insects growing in nearby croplands is also one of the reasons for decline in flow of guest birds.

The most shocking incident is that the name of princess Binnabati, daughter King Birat who dug the lake, is now being forgotten after the renaming. King Birat had named the lake Binnadighi after his daughter.

Some local people said they like to call the lake Binnadighi.
