Enumeration goes on in Ctg

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

The controversial voter listing process continued yesterday in a lax manner with enumerators appointed under political consideration.

Hasna Hena, younger sister of a ward BNP leader and teacher of City Corporation Gul-e-Zar Begum High School at city's Chandanpura area, said she was surprised to see her name as an enumerator.

"I don't know how my name came into the list of enumerators despite the fact that I've no training or basic idea about the job," she told reporters while visiting a house at Panchlaish Residential Area vesterday morning.

Hasna Hena, who took up teaching only six months ago, further said, "the atmosphere in the school is very much new to me and this extra responsibility involving election at this stage of my life is all the more embarrassing.'

The apparently "embarrassed" young teacher was found more interested in school activities than doing this "odd" job.

"I've to attend an important meeting at my school. So, please fill these up and I will come after 1:00pm to collect these," she asked the owner of the aforesaid house, leaving ten forms there.

Hasna said she has not received any money for doing the job.

Replying to a query, she disclosed that her brother Rezaul Karim is a BNP leader of West Bakalia ward in the city and said, "He (my brother) might have included my name, although I'm not sure.

Supervisor of enumeration staff Ranjit Biswas, however, claimed that they rendered training to the enumerators including Hasna Hena.

Shahidul Alam, ward commissioner of West Bakalia, alleged that around 100 to 150 ruling party activists or supporters were entrusted to the task of information collection and each was supposed to get Tk 500.

"A BNP high-up has appointed them," he alleged.

Arsenic problem not being addressed properly Experts say at international confce

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Experts from home and abroad yesterday expressed concern that the arsenic problem in the country is not being addressed properly. They called for evolving and implementing a coordinated programme to combat the arsenic contamination.

"Though some progress have been made to contain arsenic contamination and mitigate its adverse impacts, including treatment of affected patients, we are yet to take up the issue with the seriousness and diligence it demands," said Prof Mahmudur Rahman, trust coordinator of Dhaka Community Hospital (DCH), while reading out the Dhaka Declaration of the 6th International Conference on 'Safe Water and Safe Food Options in University, India, and the DCH, the two-day conference began at the DCH auditorium in the city yesterday. The experts called on the media to highlight the threat of chronic arsenic poisoning and sensitise all concerned to adopt measures to fight the threat.

They also called for ensuring supply of safe drinking water in all arsenic-affected areas as there is no known cure for Arsenicosis. Referring to the research findings that the irrigation water containing arsenic affects soil and crops and thus enter the food chain, the experts said more research activities are needed to establish the relationship between arsenic in irrigation water and its accumulation in crops.

They also stressed the need for evaluation of all deep tubewells by an independent agency and maximum use of rainwater as safe drinking water.
