There was plenty of mudslinging going on at Stamford Bridge this week and it was not just because of the atrocious state of the pitch.

Before and after the Champions League match between Barcelona and Chelsea, the two sides were busy exchanging accusations about alleged dirty tricks.

Barca players suggested Chelsea had deliberately allowed the surface to deteriorate in order to hinder their trademark passing game.

Chelsea coach Jose Mourinho said Argentine teenager Lionel Messi had used a theatrical roll to engineer the sending off of Chelsea left back Asier del Horno.

Neatly overlooking the fact that the defender had also been writhing around in agony in an attempt to avoid a booking, Mourinho said the decision to dismiss Del Horno had tainted the "purity of the

It is easy to rail against declining standards of sportsmanship in football and hark back to the "good old days" when it was a hard but honourable game. Neatly choreographed dives, exaggerated suffering, pressurising of officials and a host of other underhand tactics happen at almost every top-level match. But this sort of behaviour is merely the present manifestation of the sort of gamesmanship that has always gone on.

Robbie Fowler was rightly praised when he tried to convince the referee that he had not been fouled in the area by Arsenal keeper David Seaman in 1996-97 as was Paolo Di Canio when he refused to take a shot on goal because an opponent was injured.

But these are the honourable exceptions. In reality the more underhand tactics and dirty tricks have always been part of the beau-

Kahn out of Italy friendly

Germany goalkeeper Oliver Kahn has been forced to pull out of Wednesday's World Cup warmup friendly against Italy after failing to overcome a thigh strain, Bayern Munich spokesman Markus Horwick said on Friday.

Kahn was due to start the match ahead of Arsenal goalkeeper Jens Lehmann but now Germany coach Jurgen Klinsmann has called up Stuttgart keeper Timo Hildebrand to his squad to act as Lehmann's understudy for the match in Florence on March 1.

"It's a shame that Oliver had to announce that his injury was worse than originally thought," said Klinsmann, who added the player, if fit, would be the number one keeper for the following match against the USA in Dortmund on March 22.

Al-Ahly lift African Super Cup

Goalkeeper Essam al-Hadary was once again the hero of Egypt as Al-Ahly lifted the African Super Cup with a penalty shootout triumph over FAR Rabat Friday.

Neither club scored in 120 minutes of regulation and extra time before Ahly converted four consecutive kicks while Al-Hadary saved two Moroccan kicks at a wellpopulated Cairo Stadium.

South Africa's bowling woes continued Saturday ahead of the opening clash of a five-match one-day international series against Australia at Centurion Sunday.

Key all-rounder Shaun Pollock, who was the country's leading bowler after injuries ravaged the side during a recent series in Australia, will play Sunday but could miss the rest of the series because of a right knee ligament injury which will require keyhole surgery.

Coach Mickey Arthur admitted: 'It's a dilemma. Do we take him out of the rest of the one-day series to make sure he is fit for the six Test matches we have coming up, or do we keep playing him and hope he doesn'tbreakdown?"

South Africa have three Tests against Australia, starting on March 16, followed by three more against New Zealand.

Pollock will play Sunday because two other front-line bowlers, chaya Ntini and Andre Nei, are still recovering from injuries.

you and you won't talk about me.' I still hear the odd snipe in my direction, but don't pay attention. I just wish to point out two things. Firstly, I agreed to leave by giving up on 2.4-million-pounds without a new club waiting for me, as before Milan I had only received an offer from Greece. Second, I don't think my partnership with Adriano was so very absurd and this season has proved that." Vieri has twice broken the record for the most expensive ever signing, but has won precious little in his career.

"I've been unlucky," he noted. "I lost a Champions League Final with Juventus and threw away two Scudetto titles on the last day, one with Lazio and the infamous May 5, 2002 with Inter. That night I felt like throwing myself out of a window and it still eats away at me. As for the money, the only time I ever made a move purely for cash was when Juve sold me to Atletico Madrid, and both parties were happy with that exchange."

On Sunday, Lippi will unveil his squad for the friendly against Germany and many believe Vieri will be on that list.

Will I go to the World Cup? I think so, but if I don't, then my respect for Lippi would not wane. This is a wonderful side and, if Francesco Totti recovers, they'll have the best assist-man on the planet with the formidable Luca Toni and Alberto Gilardino.
