

Once a palmist told him that he would meet with a tragic accident within a year. For the next one year he just sat at home. He even refused to go to the kitchen market located very near to his house.

When You Live by the Your Palm

SHAHNOOR WAHID

Y friend Akkel Ali was a fervent believer in palmistry. He devoted a couple of hours Leveryday to look at the lines on his right palm to find out if any changes had taken place overnight. He has been eating his breakfast, lunch and supper with spoon and fork for the last ten years. Why? Well, he thinks that if he ate with his hand all the good lines, stars, mounts, triangles etc would vanish soon! He has spent a sizeable portion of his time in the office consulting books and magazines where anything remotely connected to palmistry was published. He would immediately memorise every bit of new information and then try to see if the interpretations had anything to do with the things happening in his life. He followed every instruction meticulously.

Once a palmist told him that he would meet with a tragic accident within a year. For the next one year he just sat at home. He even refused to go to the kitchen market located very near to his house. His wife had to do the marketing everyday and take the children to school. He crossed the dates on his calendar everyday till the last day of the year and then on the first day of the following year he stepped out