Britain 'reasonably confident' of US trade deal despite Huawei concerns

Britain takes US concerns about its use of Huawei equipment seriously but is confident a trade deal with the United States will be among its first after leaving the European Union, its foreign secretary said on Monday.

US officials have hinted future trade talks could be affected by Britain's decision last month to grant Huawei a limited role in its 5G mobile network, frustrating a global bid by the United States to exclude the firm from the West's next-generation communications systems.

We listened and take the concerns of our American friends very seriously." Dominic Raab said in response to a question about the issue.

free trade agreement (with America) in that first wave of post-Brexit trade deals," Raab added, during a visit to Singapore.

We have had a good conversation about Huawei and the one thing we all recognise is there has been market failure in terms of hightrust vendors being able to provide telecoms infrastructure." Last month, Britain said it would cap at 35per cent the involvement of "high-risk vendors", such as Huawei, in the non-sensitive parts of its 5G mobile network. Excluding Huawei altogether would have delayed 5G and cost consumers more, it added.

Yet some senior members of Prime Minister Boris Johnson's Conservatives have demanded

"We are reasonably confident that we can do a that Huawei must not have a role, a position described on Sunday as a "kind of witch-hunt" by China's ambassador to Britain.

> Britain is in talks with America, Australia, Canada, and others on future technological innovations that could challenge Huawei's dominance in the field, Raab said.

> "For 5G, the sooner we can build up our pool of high-trust vendors the less reliant we will be on high-risk vendors," he added.

> Raab, who is visiting Asia to seek free trade deals after Brexit, said he also expected Singapore to be in the first wave of post-Brexit trade deals.

> He will travel to Malaysia on Tuesday, wrapping up a tour that included Australia and Turkish lira rebounds from sharp selloff after regulator steps in

The Turkish lira rebounded in volatile trade on Monday to below 6 against the dollar, erasing much of Friday's sharp losses, after a bank regulator announced new limits on foreign-exchange transactions.

Investors and traders said the currency's abrupt selloff and recovery, after weeks in a narrow range, suggested Turkish state banks were again intervening to buffer the lira after they sold tens of billions of dollars over the past year.

The BDDK bank regulator on Sunday cut the limit for Turkish banks' forex swap, spot and forward transactions with foreign entities to 10per cent of their equity, from a 25per cent ceiling set in August 2018 during the worst of Turkey's currency crisis.

The lira strengthened to as low as 5.975 against the dollar and was worth 5.9955 at 0817 GMT.

It had tumbled to 6.05 on Friday, its weakest level in regular trading since May, as a late-week rally in the dollar prompted a selloff across emerging markets.

US jobs data and global coronavirus worries hold dollar firm

REUTERS, Singapore

The dollar held gains on Monday after job market data provided the latest sign of US economic strength, while worries about the coronavirus epidemic kept other trade-exposed currencies subdued.

Data on Friday showed US job growth accelerated last month, blowing past estimates, with particular strength in construction indicating the economy is in decent shape.

The death toll from the coronavirus outbreak, meanwhile, rose again over the weekend, passing the total killed by the SARS epidemic. It now stands at 908 in mainland China, where there are a total of 40,171 infections.

That has left tradeexposed currencies on the back foot, the dollar at milestone highs against other majors and safehaven currencies such as the yen trading firmly.

The Australian dollar touched a fresh decade-low of $0.6657 in early trade and last stood at $0.6680. The New Zealand dollar touched a two-month low of $0.6397

Against the euro, the greenback was just below a four-month high of $1.0940 hit on Friday at $1.0948. The pound was parked near its lowest since November at $1.2890.

"There is an overriding theme of US dollar strength against a backdrop where the data continues to suggest that the US economy is faring better than others," Rodrigo Catril, senior FX strategist at National Australia Bank in Sydney.
