12-day Romance

Pamela Anderson's whirlwind romance with producer Jon Peters comes to a shocking end after just twelve days of marriage. According to sources, the actor got married right after a "one-month 'spiritual cleanse' in India" which meant that her "heart was open, but, in hindsight, too open." Reportedly, Anderson tied the knot three days after her trip and regretted her decision one and a half days afterwards. Supposedly, Peters was "trying to be too controlling over her" and disliked her choice of financial independence. The duo weren't required to file for divorce or annulment as their marriage was not bound by proper paperwork. Anderson also said, "Life is a journey and love is a process. With that universal truth in mind, we have mutually decided to put off the formalization of our marriage certificate and put our faith in the process."

A bundle of JOY

After a long and difficult pregnancy, actor Kalki Koechlin emerges victorious with a beautiful baby girl with partner, Guy Hershberg. According to reports, the baby was born on the 7th of February, during the evening. While she has been active on social media all throughout her pregnancy, sharing pictures of the baby bump among other things, she hasn't yet posted a picture of her baby. The last post on her Instagram was a picture of her touching her bump with a long caption regarding love, hate, creation, destruction and balance. Reportedly, Kalki wanted to give water birth to her daughter as she was born the same way. Whether or not she followed through will be found out soon enough, when the couple give their statements. Hopefully, we will be able to see many cute pictures of the baby as soon as possible.
