

Tears of salt farmers

Large stock, illegal imports cause huge losses to producers

MOKAMMEL SHUVO, back from Cox's Bazar

Abdul Karim's eyes sparkle with joy when he stares at his salt flats shining white under the sun. But his joy soon begins to fade when he thinks of selling the fruit of his labour.

Spending around Tk 1.60 lakh on leased land, hiring labour, and other production-related activities, the farmer from Chawfaldandi village in Cox's Bazar Sadar is set for a total yield of 800 maunds of salt from his 1.6 acres by the end of the season.

But a maund of the daily essential is now being sold at Tk 150 in the market and if he sells at this price, he estimates a loss of Tk 40,000.

"We will not even recoup production costs this season because of the low price. And if the price fall continues for long, we will have to cut back," said Karim, his sun-baked face turning gloomy.

He said they had incurred a loss despite selling a maund of salt at Tk 200. "But the situation this time is worse as the price has gone down to Tk 150 per maund," he added.

Like Karim, around 30,000 salt farmers from Cox's Bazar and a few from Chattogram are incurring significant losses for the price drop.

Salt farmers and government officials alleged that a syndicate of unscrupulous businessmen and mill owners is manipulating the price of salt.

They said that despite a ban on the import of edible salt, some unscrupulous salt traders imported a large amount of edible salt in the name of sodium sulphate, known as industrial salt, from countries like China and India where

Law ministry and Supreme Court (SC) sources said the ministry passed the order following the approval of the SC.
