people to avoid crowds and public transports as a precautionary measure. However, a huge number of people depend on public transports like bus, minibus and CNG-run auto-rickshaws, for their daily commute.

Salman said they have installed six sinks in front of their office in Mirpur a week ago, so that people can wash their hands.

"Today, we saw DNCC [Dhaka North City Corporation] mayor installed hand-washing facilities in different parts of the city. We hope the authorities would also take steps to disinfect public transports," he said.

The organisation will continue their campaign today starting early in the morning, he said, adding that they would set up water drums at different points as hand-washing facilities, he added.

Bidyandono is being run by 40 officers and hundreds of volunteers, whose mission is to foster philanthropy domestically and internationally by designing innovative and inspiring programmes, according to its official website.

The foundation has garnered praise for various initiatives in the past, most recently for recycling laminated election posters used during Dhaka City Corporation elections.

The flipside of the posters was turned into notebooks, while the plastic was used to pack clothes and made into strings to bind food packets, they said. They had collected more than 1 lakh posters during the campaign.

Return of the menace

"We have only three people to carry out the drive even though ours is a populous area [Dania]. We are only given 10 litres of adulticide per day. I have requested the authorities to double the amount."

"I carry out cleaning initiatives in the area on my own as we don't have any cleaning worker. I need at least 10. There are also two canals, which need to be cleaned regularly. I have informed the authorities about the issue as well," he said.

Contacted, Jamal Mostafa, panel mayor of DNCC, said the city corporation is taking various measures. "We are using larvicide and adulticide as well as applying malaria Oil-B to get better result following the suggestions of entomologists."

The panel mayor, however, said it is not just the city corporation's responsibility and everyone has to play their due role.

For example, he said, "There are many waterbodies inside privately-owned properties and land owned by other authorities where mosquitoes breed. It's their duty to clean those properly."

There are waterbodies and bushes in Dhaka airport area under the Civil Aviation Authority of Bangladesh, he said. "We have held meeting with them and also issued letters to different organisations to take necessary steps."

The panel mayor said they have engaged 11 teams from March 7 to conduct anti-mosquito drives. The teams will monitor activities at every DNCC ward.

Contacted last month, Chief Health Officer Brig Gen Sharif Ahmed of DSCC said they take measures round the year to check the population of Aedes mosquitoes, which spread dengue, chikungunya and other diseases. From November to March and April, they take steps to check culex, he said.

He said they had conducted a survey in the first week of November last year and identified many hot spots of culex mosquitoes. "We also did a follow-up drive near the end of December, and are continuing our anti-mosquito drives to bring the situation under control."

Another DSCC official said they have conducted a crash programme to destroy Aedes mosquito breeding grounds.

On March 25, DSCC Mayor Sayeed Khokon inaugurated the seven-day drive to destroy breeding sources of Aedes mosquitoes that were identified by DGHS, he said.

They have also issued letters to organisations like Rajuk, Rehab, DMP, Wasa and BWDB to take necessary steps to destroy the breeding grounds, the official added.

11 ORGS MAKING MATTERS WORSE
When Dhaka residents are finding it hard to cope with the growing mosquito menace, eleven organisations have been found helping the insect population rise by the day in the city.

The organisations, including north and south city corporations, have around 50 canals, 12 lakes, 23 ponds, and other waterbodies spanning over no less than 4,000 bighas.

Most of them do not spend any money to clean the swatches of stagnant waterbodies in and around the capital, this newspaper had reported in November 2018.

There are around 2,700 bighas of waterbodies under the two city corporations; the DC office of Dhaka has 35 canals; Dhaka Wasa is in charge of 26 canals; Bangladesh Water Development Board has around 93km of canals, one retention area and one pond; PWD has two lakes and four ponds; National Housing Authority has three ponds; Rajuk has three lakes and two ponds; Jute Research Institute and Shishu Academy have one pond each; National Botanical Garden has seven lakes and five ponds, and Bangladesh Road Research Laboratory has six ponds.

Apart from these, there are privately-owned waterbodies that are not being cleaned properly.

WHAT AUTHORITIES SAY
Asked, Wasa Managing Director Taqsem A Khan said they have started cleaning canals at a small scale. "We will launch a comprehensive drive soon."

"We dig up canals to increase their retention capacity; we do the work just before rainy seasons so that the waterbody does not get filled up with garbage before monsoon," said Taqsem.

He, however, blamed the city corporations for not cleaning up solid waste from the canals on a regular basis.

TM Rashidul Kabir, executive engineer (operation and maintenance; division 1), of BWDB, said, "We are maintaining the waterbodies under our jurisdiction on a regular basis."

However, the city corporation has to do their part as well and clean the waterbodies as they are in charge of the mosquito control activities, he said.

Rehab President Alamgir Shamsul Alamin said they have already issued multiple letters to their members and asked them to take steps so that no stagnant water remains at construction sites or project areas.

'LAX MEASURES TO BLAME'
Architect Iqbal Habib said as per the city corporation act, there is no area in the city which is not under city corporations' jurisdiction.

"They can impose fines if one does not clean a waterbody, where culex mosquitoes are breeding. They can also clean the waterbody and charge a fee for that," he said.

"City authorities have to aware people of their responsibilities. A coordinated approach is needed in this fight," said the joint secretary of Bangladesh Paribesh Andolon.

Jahangirgamar University's entomologist Kabirul Bashar, along with a team of researchers, has been conducting surveys on the capital's waterbodies under a three-year project. He explained that until this year, the highest density of culex mosquito larvae was found in January -- at 50 larvae per 500ml of water.

"This year, for the first time, we found about 150-200 larvae in 500ml of water in a survey conducted between February 11 and 18 in the two city corporation areas," he said.

"Rise in temperatures from mid-February is leading to increase in organic matter in waterbodies, which provides food and a conducive breeding environment to mosquitoes. The situation will turn dire, unless larvicide is sprayed," he added.

Entomologist Dr Manzur Chowdhury, former president of Geological Society of Bangladesh, said the number of culex mosquitoes, which spread diseases like filariasis and avian malaria, has gone "out of control" in Dhaka.

Lack of effective measures by the two city corporations and the absence of proper logistics are mainly to blame for the situation, he said.

"If city corporations do not start taking effective measures now, the increasing trend in mosquito population density will continue until a nor'wester hits the capital. The storm naturally kills culex mosquitoes and reduces their number," he added.

He also said there are problems in the chain of command and line of communication among the authorities concerned -- which need to be resolved.

Dal (Chattogram south district), was seen campaigning for BNP candidate Shahadat Hossain in Jamal Khan area.

Wearing a mask, Talukdar was handing over leaflets to residents. "Of course I'm worried," he told this newspaper. "Such gathering could lead to getting infected," he added. "But we have no alternative to campaigning, as the Election Commission did not postpone the polls yet," he said.

Bahauddin, a member of pro-BNP organisation Sramik Dal (city unit), also blamed the EC for not deferring the polls.

Port city residents, however, were not too enthused about the election-centric gatherings.

Kamrul Hasan, a resident of Jamal Khan area, suggested that the candidates conduct online campaigning. "They should be more sensitive about the present crisis," he added.

Rafik Ahmed of Askar Dighir Par area said, "I even told some candidates not to hold such gatherings in our area, but to no avail."

Contacted, Shahadat Hossain, who is also a practicing physician, said there is a tangible health risk during electioneering. "When we greet people during campaign, we shake their hands and embrace them. Being a politician, this is a common practice," he said.

He too advised the EC to take the situation seriously and urged them to ensure safety of voters as they are at risk of getting infected.

Considering the situation, he said, they have launched a web portal yesterday and asked their activists to campaign online.

Jannatul Islam of Islami Andolan Bangladesh said the candidates had a meeting with the chief election commissioner (CEC) on March 14. "The CEC did not shake our hands at the meeting... but we have to shake hands and hug voters when we meet them, otherwise they might think we are not on their side."

He also demanded deferment of polls, considering the situation.

The Awami League mayor candidate, on the other hand, had a different outlook on the issue.

"As the government has not declared the virus epidemic, there is no problem to hold the election on March 29," Rezaul Karim Chowdhury told this newspaper.

Yesterday, he campaigned in city's different wards. Rezaul, however, did not seem to have any precautionary measure planned during campaigning to tackle the situation.

When asked about the probable risk, he said there is no risk as every voter will have to wash their hands before casting vote in EVM.

But Tauhid Chowdhury, a resident of Pahartoli, was not convinced. "Will washing hands protect us from coronavirus infection when we stand in long queues with a huge number of voters at polling centres?" he asked.

Bangabandhu's

Commissioner Dr KM Kamruzzaman Selim said, "We took such an initiative to introduce Bangabandhu to the next generations at grassroots level."

"Hopefully, initiatives like this will help them learn about the ideals of the Father of the Nation and inspire them to work for the development of the country, he added.

It is necessary to know about Bangabandhu as Bangladesh's identity without the great leader is incomplete, Deputy Commissioner Kamruzzaman further said.

Among others, district unit Awami League president Sadek Quraishi and AL upazila unit president Arunangshu Datta Tito spoke at the meeting with Upazila Nirbahi Officer Abdullah Al Mamun in the chair.

Dr Akhtaruzzaman said the university will confer an honorary doctorate of law on the Father of the Nation posthumously through a special convocation on September 5.

Bangabandhu was a student of the university's law department, said Akhtaruzzaman.

He also announced programmes taken by DU marking "Mujib Borsho", which included building a sculpture of Bangabandhu, founding the "Bangabandhu Research Institute for Peace and Liberty", organising an international conference and publishing a book titled "Bangabandhu and Dhaka University".

Besides, sweets were distributed among students at dorms of the university, while special prayers were offered at the university's central mosque after Zohr prayers, seeking eternal peace of the departed soul of Bangabandhu.
