

China races to find virus vaccine, put scandals in the past

AFP, Beijing

China has mobilised its army and fast-tracked tests in the global race to find a coronavirus vaccine, but its labs also have an image tarnished by past health scandals to overcome.

Six months after the first cases emerged in the city of Wuhan, China has moved quickly to develop a vaccine and is involved in several of the dozen or so international clinical trials currently under way.

Researchers have reported promising early results from tests on humans and monkeys, and authorities hope to have the first shots ready for the public this year.

The Military Academy of Medical Sciences is among those working on a vaccine, in partnership with a pharmaceutical firm.

China has authorised fast-track procedures, allowing preclinical phases -- such as animal tests and other studies -- to be conducted at the same time instead of one after the other.

But Ding Sheng, dean of the School of Pharmaceutical Sciences at Beijing's Tsinghua University, sounded a note of caution around using "non-conventional methods".

"I understand that people are eagerly waiting for a vaccine," Ding said in the People's Daily, a Communist Party organ.

"But on a scientific point of view, we can't lower our criteria, even in an emergency," he said.

Ding also questioned the decision to authorise phase one and two clinical trials at the same time, allowing labs to avoid having to seek authorisation before proceeding from one to the other.

Nick Jackson, of the Coalition for Epidemic Preparedness Innovations (CEPI), however, pointed out that China was not the only country to do this.

"Many organisations globally are conducting adaptive trials that allow for rapid transition from phase one to two studies," said Jackson, whose organisation funds research into vaccines.

"This approach is necessary given the urgent need for vaccines."

One pharmaceutical company, Sinopharm, said its vaccine could be ready for the public at the end of the year or early 2021.

The head of China's Centre for Disease Control and Prevention hopes a vaccine could be ready as early as September for priority cases, such as health workers.

But China will also have to convince the public that any vaccine it produces are safe as the country's pharmaceutical industry has been hit by scandals involving tainted medicine and corruption in recent years.

Parents have held protests and some are scared enough to seek foreign-made vaccines for their children over those made in China.

One of the biggest scandals involved Changchun Changsheng Biotechnology, which was fined a record $1.3 billion in 2018 after it fabricated records for a rabies vaccine for humans.

West Bank annexation would upend normalisation with Israel: UAE

AFP, Jerusalem

The Emirati ambassador to Washington warned Friday that annexation by the Jewish state of parts of the West Bank would jeopardise any warming of Arab-Israeli ties.

"Annexation will certainly and immediately upend Israeli aspirations for improved security, economic and cultural ties with the Arab world and with the UAE," Yousef al-Otaiba wrote in a rare op-ed by an Emirati official in Israel's top-selling daily Yediot Aharonot.

"Recently, Israeli leaders have promoted excited talk about normalisation of relations with the United Arab Emirates and other Arab states. But Israeli plans for annexation and talk of normalisation are a contradiction," he added.

Israel is expected on July 1 to unveil its strategy for implementing a US Middle East peace plan announced by US President Donald Trump in January.

The plan -- rejected wholesale by the Palestinians -- gave the green light for Israel to annex West Bank settlements and the Jordan Valley, Palestinian territory occupied by the Jewish state since 1967.

Otaiba said his country "has been an unfailing supporter of Middle East peace" and that "annexation is the illegal seizure of Palestinian land".

It could "ignite violence and rouse extremists", he warned.

ul-Fitr last month.

Apart from the entrepreneurs, around 10,000 female artisans who hand-stitch clothes for these boutiques are without work. They also have not received payment for the work they delivered before the shops closed in March.

Talking to The Daily Star, several boutique owners in Thakurgaon said they were struggling to pay rent, utility bills, and staffers' salaries as they could not capitalise on Pahela Baishakh and Eid-ul-Fitr sales.

"We made 1,000 pieces of Baishakhi and Eid dresses including saris, salwar-kameezes, fatuas and baby clothes -- at a cost of around Tk 6 lakh -- aiming to sell these ahead of the Pahela Baishakh and Eid-ul-Fitr," said Chondona Ghosh, owner of boutique named Karupanya.

The main yearly income of these boutiques come from selling products centring around these two festivals, said Chondona, also Thakurgaon's district representative of the Bangladesh Women Chamber of Commerce and Industry (BWCCI).

The female entrepreneur invested a bulk of the year's planning and capital into this time of the year with orders already placed before the unprecedented Covid-19 outbreak-driven shutdown announced across the country in the last week of March.

Though the government permitted shops to reopen from May 10, in time for pre-Eid sales, shops in these districts were closed again, said Chondona.

As social distancing could not be maintained, the local administrations ordered shopping malls and markets to be shuttered again from May 18 in Thakurgaon.

Though shops have since reopened, since the end of the countrywide shutdown starting June 1, this gives little hope to boutique owners who cannot, for example, sell the distinctive red-and-white Pahela Baishakh outfits during the rest of the year.

Mokseda Begum, owner of Ananya Hasta Shilpa in Thakurgaon, said she had made three-pieces, panjabis, fatuas and baby clothes worth over Tk 4 lakh. But all these products lie unsold as her shop remained shut during the two festivals.

"The possibility of selling those products is uncertain as customers will not like to buy these now."

"I built up my business slowly and after the efforts of half my life," said Mokseda, adding that she cannot get her boutique up and running again without financial support.

Around 50 boutiques in the two northern districts of Thakurgaon and Panchagarh are run from the entrepreneurs' homes and at least 2,000 artisans are involved in the industry, said BWCCI's Chondona.

ARTISANS WITHOUT WORK, PAY Bilkis Begum, 30, an artisan from Gilabari village in Thakurgaon Sadar upazila, said she is one of 30 women in her village who sew for a living. They have gone unpaid by boutique owners for the work they delivered before shops were closed.

The artisans are usually paid for their work with some advance and the major amount is given after the clothes are sold.

The artisans' hopes are dimming as they are also not getting new orders from boutiques due to financial constraints, Bilkis said, meaning they could be without work and pay for months to come.

Halima Khatun, 35, of Islamnagar village in the upazila, said a total of 80 women working under her supervision were in hardship.

All the artisans are without work since the owners of boutiques have not been giving work orders for two months now. They too are yet to get wages for their work for Pahela Baishakh and Eid-ul-Fitr, she added.

Around 400-500 female entrepreneurs who sell boutique clothing and handicrafts in the eight northern districts in Rangpur division are concerned about how to sustain operations and around 10,000 artisans -- mostly women -- are without work, said Fatema Yasmin Era, BWCCI's Rangpur divisional president.

The government should bring these entrepreneurs and artisans under the coverage of special incentives so that the industry can survive, she added.

Deputy commissioner of Thakurgaon, KM Kamruzzman Selim, told The Daily Star that the government has a plan to provide support to small entrepreneurs and once the local administration receives instructions on this, it will start working on the issue.

microscopic world -- which is governed by the often unexpected processes of quantum mechanics -- and the macroscopic world, where classical physics apply.

Scientists hope to use those Bose-Einstein condensates to gain deep insight into quantum mechanics. But they have had trouble because gravity can get in the way of measuring them precisely.

That led researchers to send equipment known as the Cold Atom Lab to the International Space Station. That allowed the astronauts on board to prepare Bose-Einstein condensates in that microgravity environment, and measure how those conditions changed the properties compared with Earth.

They found, for instance, that the atoms hover around for much longer -- the state lasts for more than a second, compared with just tens of milliseconds on Earth. That in turn will allow researchers to observe the Bose-Einstein condensates with much more precision, since they will have more time to do so.

What's more, the condensates can be trapped by weaker forces, the researchers write, allowing them to reach even lower temperatures. As the conditions get colder, the exotic quantum effects become more prominent, allowing researchers to better understand them and potentially shed light on some of the most fundamental mysteries of physics.

"The successful generation of Bose-Einstein condensates in orbit unveils new opportunities for research on quantum gases as well as for atom interferometry and paves the way for even more ambitious missions," writes Maïke Lachmann in an accompanying News & Views article.

syndicates," said Sarwar-Bin-Quasem, legal and media wing director of Rab headquarters.

"Many of the members are in different countries, so we may seek Interpol's assistance to trace the traffickers and take action against them," he said.

According to Police Headquarters (PHQ) statement, around 22 cases were filed across the country regarding the trafficking of the 38 Bangladeshis.

CID is investigating 15 of the cases. Contacted, Syeda Jannat Ara, special superintendent of CID told this newspaper on Thursday that they got names of some 120 people after analysing the complaints and first information reports filed by the relatives of the victims who were killed in Libya.

Apart from them, CID teams got dozens of more names, she said, adding that it might take some time to tell the exact number of people involved.

Golam Mostofa Rashel, deputy commissioner of DB police, said police have already got names of some Bangladeshis staying in the UAE, Libya and Amman, said.

Meanwhile, CID claimed to have discovered another route of human trafficking after arresting five traffickers from Dhaka on Wednesday.

The arrestees are Abdul Jalil, Rubel Hossain, Rubel Ahmed, Kutub Uddin and Parvez Ahmed.

According to CID officials, the traffickers first send job seekers to India on tourist visas. And then they send the victims to Spain via the UAE, Algeria and Morocco.

mechanism" to deal with the outbreak, as paramilitary police were seen around the market and a mass testing campaign was announced.

The chairman of the Xinfadi market told state media that the virus was detected on chopping boards used to handle imported salmon.

MORE THAN 426,000 DEAD Worldwide, the pandemic has killed more than 426,000 people and infected more than 7.6 million, while wreaking large-scale economic devastation, reports AFP.

Brazil's health ministry reported 909 deaths in the past 24 hours, putting the total at 41,828 -- meaning the country of 212 million people has now surpassed Britain's death toll.

"Some areas are at a critical stage" in Brazil, with intensive care unit occupancy levels of more than 90 percent, World Health Organization emergencies director Mike Ryan said.

Brazilian President Jair Bolsonaro, who threatened last week to quit the WHO over "ideological bias", has dismissed the virus as a "little flu", and berated state officials for imposing lockdowns.

World health officials have warned that the virus is far from contained.

The WHO this week said the pandemic is accelerating in Africa, and Botswana's capital Gaborone was locked down yesterday after new cases were detected.

In the US, which has confirmed the most Covid-19 deaths with over 114,000, more than a dozen states, including two of the most populous, Texas and Florida, reported their highest-ever daily case totals this week.

But Europe is pushing ahead with its exit from lockdown, with a number of countries preparing to reopen borders on Monday after the EU Commission urged a relaxation of restrictions.

France said it would gradually reopen its borders to non-Schengen countries from next month, and Germany said it would end land border checks on Monday.

Greece said it would welcome tourists again, while Poland yesterday reopened its borders to all fellow EU members.

COURT ACTION

In several European countries the focus has shifted to the courts and who might eventually be pinned with the blame over the pandemic.

In hard-hit Italy, prosecutors grilled Prime Minister Giuseppe Conte for three hours over his government's initial response.

"I explained everything to prosecutors. I am totally calm," Conte said yesterday, adding he did not fear a judicial probe would be opened.

Elsewhere, British Airways, easyJet and Ryanair launched legal action ministry sources said.

Currently, the hospital has 106 doctors and 247 nurses, of whom 90 are pregnant or lactating mothers and would not be able to provide service for now. There are 70 other staffers, including medical technologists.

Speaking to the media on several occasions, the hospital authorities said there are a 120 beds designated for patients of highly infectious diseases, which are ready to provide treatments for Covid-19 patients.

On a private television channel ATN News on May 22, the hospital's joint director Golam Kibria said, "We have completed our preparations to provide treatment."

He said they have already ensured ICU beds, central oxygen supply system for the patients, and provided necessary training to their doctors, nurses and general staffers to keep themselves protected from coronavirus.

Trump says he will 'do other things' if he loses 2020 election

REUTERS, Washington

US President Donald Trump said he will go on to other things if he loses the Nov. 3 election, after Democratic opponent Joe Biden said the Republican might cheat and refuse to leave the White House.

"Certainly if I don't win, I don't win. I mean, you know, go on and do other things," Trump told Fox News Channel in a television interview broadcast on Friday.

She said that a coronavirus unit has been launched at Chattogram Maa O Shishu Hospital on June 8.

"I have made this decision [to serve people at the coronavirus unit] after discussing with my family members. All of them, including my husband Mahbubur Rahman Shawon, have supported me."

The doctor said she could not forget her professional oath and responsibilities. "So, I decided to return to work relying on God."

Rezaul Karim Azad, treasurer of the hospital management committee, told The Daily Star, "Dr Afroza has applied for cancellation of leave to serve patients despite knowing that it is very risky. In the application, she also mentioned that she is interested in serving at the coronavirus unit."

Sources said the hospital has started a coronavirus unit of 100 beds with central oxygen facility since June 8 and it would increase the number of beds to 400 including a 20-bed isolation ward in phases.

against the British government over a 14-day coronavirus quarantine system introduced this week.

The pandemic has caused unemployment to soar around the world and particularly affected the poor, whose plight Pope Francis highlighted yesterday.

"In these months when the whole world was overwhelmed by a virus that brought pain and death, distress and bewilderment, how many outstretched hands we could we see!" the pontiff said in a message for the World Day of the Poor.

In Nepal, police arrested 10 people, including seven foreigners, yesterday as demonstrations against the government's handling of the coronavirus crisis continued with hundreds of protesters gathering in the capital city Kathmandu, reports Reuters.

Sport has been returning to action around the world, mostly to empty stadiums, but more than 20,000 fans turned out in New Zealand's Dunedin to watch a Super Rugby match yesterday.

Spectator Wendy said she had feared the country would stay locked down longer.

"But I'm happy that we're not," she said. "Nobody's wearing masks, it's good."

They even prepared residential and quarantine facilities for staffers, in case any health worker develops Covid-19 symptoms, he said.

Asked whether there would be any VIP issues, Dr Faruque said, "No. There would be no classification [of patients]. We will admit any Covid-19 patient should they require hospitalisation."

Meanwhile, the health ministry on Thursday sent a letter to the finance ministry requesting it to allow the hospital to hire 150 health workers through outsourcing.

In the letter, the health ministry said hiring 150 staffer thorough a tender process would be time-consuming and to facilitate emergency Covid-19 treatment, the finance ministry should allow the hospital to hire the manpower directly.

"The proposal is still at the finance ministry," Faruque said.

Nannu's brother Ikbal Hossain Bablu, however, said he heard the fire broke out after Nannu tried to light a cigarette with his lighter in their veranda.

Meanwhile, the building's caretaker had a different version of the incident.

Mansur Alam, the caretaker of the building, told reporters that he woke up around 3:50am following three big bangs and the shouts of people in the neighbourhood.

"Nannu's apartment was facing a gas line problem but as far he knows the problem was solved before the family move into the apartment after major repair work on May 31," he said.

Nannu would be buried in Jashore, according to family members.

Inspector General of Police Benazir Ahmed expressed his condolences over the death, while CRAB also mourned the death of its former secretary.
