COVID-19 PANDEMIC Palliative Care in a pickle

Fewer terminally ill patients seek treatment at hospitals

NILIMA JAHAN

The ongoing Covid-19 outbreak has made palliative care services relatively inaccessible for patients with terminal illnesses, said doctors.

Since these patients usually have low immunity, they are more prone to viral or bacterial diseases than a normal person, noted Dr Amirul Morshed Khasru.

The doctor heads the Paediatric Oncology and Haematology Department and Paediatric Palliative Care Unit of Dhaka Medical College Hospital (DMCH).

He said if patients with serious illnesses such as cancer, kidney disease and Alzheimer's contract coronavirus, they suffer more, and often require more time, about 28 to 30 days, to recover.

Thus, it has become difficult to provide palliative care to these patients in hospital wards amid the coronavirus contagion, the physician said.

In fact, DMCH's paediatric palliative unit had to be kept closed for most of April, after a leukemia patient undergoing treatment there was tested Covid-19 positive.

While the infected child was shifted to Kurmitola hospital for coronavirus treatment, other patients in the unit had to be sent to their homes, private clinics and other hospitals, said Dr Amirul.

Around 13 nurses, who came in contact with the child, tested positive, he added.

"When we reopened the unit, we decided to send the

Trump suggests delaying US polls

REUTERS, Washington

US President Donald Trump yesterday raised the possibility of delaying the nation's Nov 3 presidential election, though the Constitution bestows that power on Congress, not the president.

The move drew immediate objections from Democrats and it was not clear whether Trump was serious. Trump also said he would not trust the results of an election that included widespread mail voting - a measure that many election observers see as critical given the coronavirus pandemic.

Trump, without evidence, repeated his claims of mail-in voter fraud and raised the question of a delay, tweeting: "delay the election until people can properly, securely and safely vote???"

Trump's tweet came shortly after the United States reported its worst economic downturn since the Great Depression: a second-quarter crash in gross domestic product due to widespread shutdowns prompted by the coronavirus pandemic.

Trump, who is trailing challenger and former Vice President Joe Biden in opinion polls, had previously intended to focus his re-election bid on the nation's economic performance.

Trump had previously suggested he would not trust election results - complaints similar to those he raised

STONEHENGE BOULDERS Mystery of mighty stones solved

AFP, Washington

Stonehenge, a Neolithic wonder in southern England, has vexed historians and archaeologists for centuries with its many mysteries: How was it built? What purpose did it serve? Where did its towering sandstone boulders come from?

That last question may finally have an answer after a study published Wednesday found that most of the giant stones -- known as sarsens -- seem to share a common origin 25 kilometers (16 miles) away in West Woods, an area that teemed with prehistoric activity.

The finding boosts the theory that the megaliths were brought to Stonehenge about the

CORONAVIRUS PANDEMIC Australia marks deadliest day

India sees highest cases in 24 hrs; US deaths surpass 150,000

AGENCIES

Australia yesterday reported a record number of new coronavirus infections and its deadliest day of the epidemic so far following a spike in cases at elderly-care homes.

Days after authorities expressed hope that a Melbourne lockdown now in its third week was bringing persistent outbreaks under control, the surge is a potent warning that initial success in managing coronavirus can quickly unravel.

Fourteen deaths and 723 positive test results were recorded in Victoria State alone, well beyond the previous nationwide high of 549 infections set on Monday.

State Premier Daniel Andrews indicated the leap was, in part, linked to a surge in cases at aged-care homes. Most of those who died were aged in their 70s-90s.

Spikes in infections in Asia have dispelled any notion the region may be over the worst, with Australia, India and Hong Kong reporting record daily cases, Vietnam testing thousands and North Korea urging vigilance.

Asian governments had largely prided themselves on rapidly containing initial outbreaks after the virus emerged in central China late last year, but flare-ups this month have shown the danger of complacency.

India yesterday saw its biggest jump in daily cases as the total tally of infections reached near the 11.6 million mark yesterday.

A total of 52,123 infections were reported from across the country in the last 24 hours, taking India's total
