ELEPHANT POACHING, KILLINGS Swept under the rug

MOSTAFA YOUSUF, Chattogram

To avoid animosity with locals responsible for the deaths of wild elephants in the Chattogram region, forest department officials manipulate autopsy reports by attributing the deaths to natural causes and rarely file cases, thus sparing the killers of a critically endangered species.

On June 28, a baby elephant was found dead within the periphery of a tea garden in Boilchari union of Banskhali upazila this year.

The tea garden authorities most likely installed the barbed wire fence to stop elephants entering the garden, according to villagers.

Though accounts of eyewitnesses and forest officers indicate that the elephant died of electrocution -- given the presence of metal wire and an electric pole nearby -- the autopsy report was inconclusive as to the cause of death.

Three elephants died in the last two months at the Kalipur range office of Banskhali upazila, which falls under the jurisdiction of Chattogram Divisional Forest Office (South).

They were all Asian elephants, which are classified as "critically endangered" in Bangladesh.

When a livestock official tries to portray the true cause of death in the autopsy, they come under pressure from forest department higher-ups, a livestock official who performs autopsies at the forest office, preferring anonymity, told The Daily Star.

In another autopsy of an elephant that died at Fasiakhali of Lama upazila in Bandarban, it was shown to be a natural death, though an electric metal wire was found close to the spot, according to eyewitnesses.

COVID-19 IN PABNA Poor testing, facilities result fewer cases

AHMED HUMAYUN KABIR TOPLU, Pabna

Five months after Covid-19 cases first emerged in Pabna, the district health authorities say it is much better placed than other districts in terms of number of cases.

The reality, however, is that extremely limited testing and treatment facilities means low number of Covid-19 cases and patients seeking treatment in hospitals.

Though Pabna was allotted three PCR machines early into the outbreak, according to sources in the district health department and the respective ministries which allotted these, the machines are yet to be set up due to the local health authorities dragging their feet over lack of manpower and high operating costs to start testing.

The first Covid-19 patient was reported in the district on April 16 and since then, a total of 916 Covid-19 cases have been identified as of August 22, according to the Pabna civil surgeon's office.

Nine people have died while 804 of the infected patients have recovered, said Dr Abdur Rahim, Covid-19 control room in-charge of the civil surgeon's office.

Trump warns US vote count may be delayed as he doubles down on vote-by-mail fraud claims

AFP, Washington

US President Donald Trump warned Friday that the results of the November 3 presidential election could take weeks or months to determine.

Amid concerns that a wave of mail-in ballots could overwhelm the post office and local election bodies, Trump suggested the traditional election-night verdict could be delayed.

"You'll never have an election count on November 3," Trump said in a speech to the Council of National Policy, a conservative activist group.

"You're not going to be able to know the end of this election, in my opinion, for weeks, months, maybe never," he said.

The prospect of a slow count of an expected 50 million votes cast by mail -- one consequence of the coronavirus pandemic -- has raised concerns of political turmoil and mischief-making, and legal challenges that could further delay a result, for the presidential as well as congressional races.

Trump, who polls show is trailing challenger Joe Biden, alleged that Democrats were promoting universal mail-in voting to manipulate the results.

But he suggested a systemic problem as well. "We're not prepared for this, 51 million ballots. It will be a tremendous embarrassment for the country," he said.

"This is a very serious problem for a democracy." On Wednesday, a top US official for election security said his biggest worry is of outside interference in a likely
