

MIND'S EYE

In these strange countless days, I'm trying to adapt to a new normal. I look at the sky, at the ground. I look right and left. There are thousands of scattered stories floating around. I picked the floating imaginary colours from my mind and brushed the photos with them.

Isolation forces us to tap into a new part of our creativity that we wouldn't normally access. Everything is a bit confusing and up in the air, but still, everybody tries best to keep looking forward. Pandemic has changed the normalcy of life and we are all trying differently to bring back colours into our lives.
