PHENSEDYL COMING IN FROM CHUADANGA Smugglers using modified motorbikes to smuggle it

MOHAMMAD JAMIL KHAN

They called it "Phensedyl bike".

Though it looks just like a common motorbike, these have an additional chamber inside the fuel tank that can keep around 70 bottles of Phensedyl inside.

With an aim to dodge law enforcers, narcotics traders have prepared such special arrangement in motorbikes to transport the contraband drug.

The smugglers only choose 150CC motorbikes for the purpose, as these bikes have a big fuel tank and a chamber can easily be made inside it.

Even after making a chamber in the tank, they can refill three to four litres of fuel in the tank for their journey from one place to another, without raising any alarm. Police's detective branch (DB) has claimed to have learned about these special bikes following arrest of a narcotics smuggler from the capital's Jatrabari area on Monday.

Based on a specific tip-off that a smuggler was coming to Dhaka from Chuadanga with Phensedyl on a motorbike, DB police arrested its driver Sirajul Islam.

But searching his bike and bag, they did not find any Phensedyl. The biker then brought allegations of harassment against the DB team.

The DB team then called on a motorbike mechanic and asked to dismantle the bike. Around 20 minutes later, they found some 70 bottles of Phensedyl inside a special chamber in the oil tank of the bike.

Junaed Alam Sarker, additional deputy commissioner of DB police who led the drive, later shared his experience with The Daily Star.

He said they later interrogated the arrestee on remand, and came to know that the syndicate has around 10 such special motorbikes, which they use to smuggle Phensedyl directly from the bordering point of Chuadanga district.

"The syndicate's members load the bottles into the bike from a mechanic's shop in Darshana. Later, they drive to Dhaka and unload the package again in a mechanic's shop in Jatrabari," said the officer.

For the journey, the biker has to refuel three to four times, as they are not able to refill more than four litres at a time, said the officer.

"Arrestee Sirajul is also a motor mechanic, and during interrogation, he admitted that he transported three of four such phensedyl consignments to Dhaka," he said.

Quoting the arrestee, Junaed further said that the syndicate also have some eight to ten more bikers, and send shipments from the bordering district to Dhaka five times a week. For each shipment, a biker receives around Tk 4,000-5,000, DB said.

Asked about the price of Phensedyl, ADC Junaed said the smugglers buy each bottle for Tk 600 to 700 in Chuadanga. In Dhaka, the "wholesale" price of each bottle becomes Tk 950 to 1,100, he said.

These bottles are later sold to addicts for Tk 1,700 to 1,900, he added.

DB officials said that they have come to know that peddlers used to smuggle Phensedyl to Dhaka in pick-up vans or trucks earlier, after hiding those inside vegetables or other products.

But it became risky in recent times as they have to count a huge loss when their consignments are intercepted by law enforcers.

For this reason, the smugglers have taken the strategy of smuggling small shipments to Dhaka so that they do not need to count huge loss even if gets seized, said DB police.

Mashiur Rahman, deputy commissioner of Gulshan Division Police, said the smugglers have recently changed their strategy to smuggle narcotics to Dhaka.

"They are now focusing on bringing small consignments instead of big ones, so that it cannot be detected by law enforcers," he said.

"We have already got details of the Phensedyl smuggling syndicate members, and are now conducting drives to arrest them," added DC Mashiur.

'Media going thru' toughest time'

Mirza Fakhrul Islam tells DUJ faction's discussion

UNB, Dhaka

Media freedom and democracy in Bangladesh "cannot be protected" without a united movement, said BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday.

"A message should be given to all that democracy, journalism, the country and its independence and sovereignty can't be protected without a united movement," he said.

The BNP leader said there is no alternative to changing the current situation. "The only way to remove this fascist government is a united movement and struggle. We need unity and we've been always trying to forge it. We've to move forward by creating a national unity."

He made the remarks at a virtual discussion arranged by a faction of Dhaka Union of Journalists (DUJ).

Fakhrul said the unity of people and political parties is now imperative to "restore" democracy for which the nation fought against Pakistani occupation forces and liberated the country in 1971.

"The current government has no political values as Awami League doesn't believe in democracy. Awami League and democracy never go together... They think they're all in all and they'll run the country and control everything," he observed.

The BNP leader said the media and journalists are going through the toughest time due to the government's "repressive and suppressive" acts. "A situation has been created here, especially creating fear and panic, that no one now dares raise voice and express their views freely."

He said there have never been so many unemployed journalists in the country. "After the introduction of Bakshal in 1975, all but four newspapers were shut. They now indirectly created the same situation. Those who now speak in favour of them and those who're on their side will only be able to run their newspapers and channels and

Scientists find SARS-CoV-2's genetic material in sewage

UNB, Dhaka

A team of scientists from Noakhali Science and Technology University (NSTU) and North South University (NSU) has claimed the first and successful detection of SARS-CoV-2's genetic material in sewage water.

The team is led by Prof Firoz Ahmed, chairperson of NSTU's microbiology department, said an NSTU media release yesterday.

They collected specimens between July 10 and August 29 from drains, sewage and toilets near Shaheed Bhulu Stadium Detention Centre for Covid-19 patients in Noakhali.

The team "successfully detected" several genes of the virus from the samples, it said.

While wastewater surveillance for Covid-19 around the world has focused on wastewater treatment plants, the researchers opted for drain water monitoring near isolation centres, which is first of its kind.

The study focuses on tracing genetic load, how much genetic material is found at certain points, in vicinity of isolation centres that contain constant number of Covid-19 patients. The critical observation has been variation, where small drains showed reduction of genetic load than bigger canals and main city sewers, where the team observed temporal accumulation of SARS-CoV-2 RNA.

According Prof Nazrul Islam, renowned virologist and former vice chancellor (VC) of Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujib Medical University, it is internationally accepted that SARS-CoV-2 can be present in the gastrointestinal system. Therefore, the team's method to identify the virus' presence in sewage water could serve as a tool to prevent future spread of the disease.

Prof Nazrul considers the initiative a remarkable achievement in developing an effective waste water surveillance system in Bangladesh.
