The arrestee was identified as Tuhin Bhuiyan (22). His mother Mamta Begum is a peon at a local primary school.

The arrestee is a drug addict, said police.

Shops have flourished under the stairs of this footbridge on both sides of the road at the capital's Shahbagh, illegally encroaching all available spaces, some even spilling over to the footpath. Vendors are comfortably running their businesses like this for ages, as authorities seem to turn a blind eye to this open violation. This photo was taken on Saturday.

RAPE OF 6-YEAR-OLD IN CTG A mother's weary quest for justice

FM MIZANUR RAHMAN

Last week, a woman was seen sitting in front of Chattogram Press Club. She did not have any banner or poster with her nor a group of people to express solidarity. All she had was pain in her eyes, which had become weary seeking justice.

When approached by this correspondent, she said she wants justice for her six-year-old daughter, who was raped by their neighbours in 2018.

Though she had filed a case in this regard, two years after the incident, the case is yet to be resolved, with the perpetrators -- out on bail -- roaming free.

"I have nowhere else to go, that's why I came to seek help from the media," she wailed.

She said on April 18, 2018, her daughter was home alone at their rented tin-shed house at CNB area's Hamidchar.

She, an apparel factory worker, and her rickshaw-puller husband were both out on work.

When the mother came back home, she found her daughter writhing in agony. She said two men had come in and hurt her. Distressed over what might have happened, she checked her daughter's body and found blood around her genitals.

She informed her neighbours. A crowd then gathered and the girl was asked to identify who had hurt her.

She pointed at their neighbour Abu Nasher alias Jamal (50). It was later found that the other person was Jasim Uddin (40).

She said her husband was visiting Sylhet at the time and she could not take up the issue immediately. On top of this, she fell ill with chickenpox soon after.

It took around 10 days before the family could lodge a case with Chandgaon Police Station accusing Jamal and Jasim of raping their daughter.

Pubail 'shooting village' coming back to old self

Actors and crew have started returning to Bhadun, after months of closure.

SHAH ALAM SHAZU

For many celebrities of the big and small screen and the creative people behind their success, the 'shooting gram' on the outskirts of Dhaka has been almost like a second home, if only by the sheer amount of time they spend there.

The entire village -- dedicated to year-long shooting of TV plays and films -- is Bhadun, under Pubail union of Gazipur, known for multiple shooting spots interspersed across it.

The economy of the village -- almost completely dependent on shooting -- took a big hit when filming of all kinds was off for close to five months due to the coronavirus outbreak. All shooting houses were forced to lay shut. Stripped of their rent income, the owners of the houses had a hard time coping with the "new normal", like many others who make a living off the entertainment industry.

But things are getting back to normal again. As the shutdown has been eased and fear of the virus is gradually subsiding, the houses have started to bustle once again. Filming is going on all day, and sometimes even into the night, but business is yet to pick up to previous levels.

"We have been bearing a lot of losses over the last five months," shooting house owner Musa Miah lamented. "Though filming has resumed, it's yet to reach normal levels. We also have to bear the cost of buying masks and sanitisers for the staff."

The costs of the pandemic isn't limited to just the house owners of Bhadun. A case of all eggs in one basket, almost the entirety of Bhadun's economy is dependent on filming. When schedules are off, the whole community suffers.

The list of beneficiaries of Bhadun's unique disposition stretches long. Alongside shooting houses and the staffers they employ, there are households that rent out their farm animals for "acting", generator service providers, dining staff, and even shopkeepers.

34th span of Padma Bridge installed

BSS, Munshiganj

The 34th span of the Padma Bridge was installed yesterday, bringing a total of over 5.1km of the structure into view.

The span number "2A" was installed between pillars 7 and 8 at Mawa point, six days after the last one was set up.

Executive Engineer (Bridge) Dewan Md Abdul Quader confirmed the matter and said a crane ship started work around 4pm on Saturday to lay span on the pillars from the Mawa construction jetty, but it was too dark to work smoothly when it reached near the pillars. That's why installation was completed yesterday morning, he added.

With this, a total of three spans have been placed on the bridge this month.

The 35th span is to be set up on the banks of Padma river in Mawa on October 30. The other 6 spans will be installed on the pillars by December this year.

A total of 42 pillars are being constructed for the 6.15km long two-storey Padma Bridge.
