a national one with participation of the private sector."

Referring to post-vaccination side effects, eminent scientist Dr Ferdousi Qadri said whatever risks the developed countries face, Bangladesh will face those too.

"...We have to be careful, we have to look at the side effects. We have a different type of population. Genetics is different. We don't know how the vaccine will work in our setting. Unless we use the vaccine, we will not know how to go forward with it, and we don't have a choice."

"I think face covering, hand washing and sanitisation will continue. We have to vaccinate 80 percent of the population to get herd immunity... It's not that we will get vaccines whenever we want," she mentioned.

About vaccine requisition by developed countries, Ferdousi said, "The most terrible thing is vaccine nationalisation. So [the question is] how Bangladesh will get enough shots of vaccines."

Recently, an international campaigners' alliance, which includes Amnesty International, Frontline AIDS, Global Justice Now and Oxfam, warned that nine out of 10 people in 70 low-income countries are unlikely to be vaccinated against Covid next year.

It mentioned that rich countries with 14 percent of the world's population have secured 53 percent of the Covid vaccines either approved by various regulatory authorities or pending approval.

At yesterday's discussion, several experts said arranging and maintaining cold storage for vaccines is another challenge for the country.

Initiated in 1979, a total of 692 cold chain points (2-8°C) have been set up across the country. They can accommodate 50 lakh doses of vaccines at a time.

"If we get the vaccines [Oxford-AstraZeneca vaccines] in phases, we can accommodate those with our existing capacity. But we will not be able to do so if those arrive in a huge volume at a time," said Hamidul Islam, cold chain specialist at the Unicef Bangladesh.

Raising the issue of selecting vaccine recipients, eminent vaccine expert Dr Bijon Kumar Sil said, "Who will get the vaccine?... Only those who have no antibody [against coronavirus] should get the vaccine. We have to select those people through laboratory tests."

Echoing his view, ex-health minister Ruhul urged the government to introduce antibody-based rapid testing.

Prof Rounaq Jahan, distinguished fellow at the Centre for Policy Dialogue, said the government took up many plans in the last nine months but it was seen that it had no capacity to implement those.

"Plans have to be prepared based on experience."

Prof Sanya Tahmina, former additional director general at the Directorate General of Health Services (DGHS), said, "The reasons behind the excitement surrounding vaccines are business and politics... Wearing masks, hand washing and other hygiene-related matters are more important."

Prof Dr Rashid-E-Mahbub said the private sector should be permitted to import and distribute vaccines.

"But that must be done under the government's regulatory control."

Awami League lawmaker Dr Habibe Millat said it may not be the case that people will queue in their thousands to get vaccines.

He also pointed out that the country doesn't have adequate human resources to vaccinate a large segment of the population at a time.

Dr Md Tajuddin Sikder, chairman of public health and informatics department at Jahangirnagar University, and Dr Rumana Huque, professor of Economics at Dhaka University, also spoke.

Last week, the DGHS submitted the draft National Vaccine Deployment Plan to the health ministry for approval, according to DGHS officials.

As per the plan, 80 percent of the country's population will be vaccinated in four phases. The first consignment of 50 lakh vaccine shots is likely to arrive from India next month or in February.

Around 10 percent of the population or 1.73 crore people will be vaccinated in the first phase. They include frontline government and private healthcare workers, freedom fighters, elderly citizens with comorbidity, members of law enforcement agencies and civil administration, journalists, staffers of religious institutions, emergency service workers, migrant workers, and immunocompromised people.

The rest of the population will be vaccinated in three more phases.

So far, the government has secured 98 million doses of Covid vaccines from two different sources. Of those, 68 million doses will be supplied by the global vaccine alliance "Gavi" under a global arrangement called COVAX facility. Another 30 million doses of Oxford-AstraZeneca vaccine will come from Serum Institute of India via Beximco Pharmaceuticals Ltd.

Deadly Fiji super cyclone sparks disease fears

AFP, Suva

Disease threatens to worsen an already desperate situation in Fiji, an official warned yesterday, where thousands of lives have been devastated in the wake of the deadly super cyclone Yasa.

Agencies rushed food and clean water to areas where the storm smashed into the northern islands of the South Pacific nation on Thursday night, forcing more than 23,000 people to flee their homes.

Four people died and entire villages were wiped out, with crops and livestock destroyed.

Agriculture officials are being sent to hard-hit areas to help farmers dispose of dead livestock to reduce the risk of disease, National Disaster Management Office director Vasiti Soko said.

Fiji is prone to violent storms at this time of year, with Cyclone Winston killing 44 people when it slammed into the islands in 2016.

"We're going to be doing a lot of work around shelter and the provision of clean water because we have seen the diseases that follow these cyclones... leptospirosis, diarrhoea, dengue, and especially if access to hospitals is limited," Ilisapeci Rokotunidau, the Fiji Red Cross director general, told AFP.

"From our experience from Winston, three months after Winston one of the biggest things was malnutrition."

Authorities on Saturday put the damage from the storm in the hundreds of millions of dollars, with one senior aid worker comparing the destruction to a war zone.

The Red Cross is now focused on providing relief to Bua and other areas in the north of Fiji hit hard by the storm.

One local man who had lost his job in the major city of Nadi due to the Covid-19 pandemic and returned to Bua to rebuild his life was reported to have lost everything after the super cyclone hit.

"Now, everything is gone and he is saying 'there is no more use in living'," Rokotunidau said. "We suspect that is the beginning of stories we will be hearing."

All stakeholders have to come under one umbrella to fight the pandemic effectively, said the minister.

Chairing the event, Secretary Ahmed Munirus Saleheen of the ministry said they have taken various initiatives to fight the challenges in the sector those emerged amid the pandemic.

Welcoming the audience, BMET Director General Shamsul Alam said this year about 2.07 lakh migrant workers have employment abroad so far, whereas last year the number was a little over seven lakh.

Benjir Ahmed, president of Bangladesh Association of International Recruiting Agencies, said they were constructing an international standard training centre in Gazipur which was at the final stage.

"Once the country will have skilled workforce, foreign recruiters will come by themselves and bargain. We want reach to that stage," he said.

Bac Executive Director Asif Saleh said the country needs to create an effective database of skilled workforce.

Besides, steps have to be taken so that skilled workers can have employment in new labour markets, he added.

Nathalie Chuard, ambassador of Switzerland in Bangladesh, said her country will keep continuing its support to Bangladesh's migration sector.

ABORTION WILL BE LEGALISED
Health and Family Planning Minister Abdul Malek says the government has principally accepted the legislation of abortion and minimum marriage age limit of 18 years for proper family planning of the country. The government can't allow the explosion of the population unchecked in this war-ravaged country, adds the minister.

Post-Brexit talks

(European) Commission we will be leaving on WTO terms on 31 December," a British government source said.

But an EU diplomat told AFP that Brussels had made Britain its last offer on fishing and it was down now to UK Prime Minister Boris Johnson to decide whether he wants a deal.

"If Britain doesn't accept the latest EU offer it will be a 'no deal' over fish," he warned. A European official said: "It's very blocked."

The tough talk came as both sides are engaged in intense -- and tense -- negotiations to secure a pact before the end of the month. No deal would risk chaos at EU and UK borders, where a pre-deadline rush has already caused long tailbacks of lorries.

Invisible they cannot remain

under the shadow of unscrupulous recruiting agencies, these middlemen often take large amounts of money from unaware migrant workers with false job promises and even get involved in human trafficking.

Against this backdrop, the parliamentary standing committee on expatriates' welfare and overseas employment ministry on October 8 discussed the issue of registering "sub-agents working under Bangladesh Association of International Recruiting Agencies (Baira)".

Later, the government in this regard formed a committee headed by Shamsul Alam, director general at Bureau of Manpower, Employment and Training (BMET).

"In broader sense, the objective is to ensure no one is deceived by middlemen," said Shamsul Alam, adding they have taken an initiative to "recognise" the middlemen and the committee held a meeting with Baira representatives to find a way.

At present, the issue is at the discussion stage to find a suitable process, the BMET boss told this newspaper by phone on December 7.

"We are kind of thinking recruiting agencies will employ [the middlemen] after getting BMET's approval," he also said, adding they will have to ensure the process is in line with the Overseas Employment and Migrant Act-2013.

Informal intermediaries and migrants' social networks now procure more than 50 percent of visas and other migration services, including passport and smart card collection, online registration and medical checkups, said the 2018 IOM-ILO report.

A World Bank report published in March this year says Bangladeshi labour workers spent on average Tk

2.78 lakh, or more than $3,000, for migration.

The highest government-fixed migration cost is Tk 1.66 lakh for jobs in Russia, followed by Tk 1.65 lakh for Saudi Arabia.

A survey of 5,407 households in the high migration-prone district Tangail in 2017 found 19 percent people could not make it for overseas jobs despite paying Tk 1.95 lakh each on an average, or around Tk 2,706.2 crore in total.

Another 32 percent who made it overseas faced harassment in the destination countries, found a survey of Refugee and Migratory Movements Research Unit (RMMRU).

Some 90 percent respondents said they paid money as migration cost to middlemen, the survey revealed.

MAKE THEM ACCOUNTABLE
Sector insiders and migrant rights groups said the government should find a viable option to hold middlemen accountable.

RMMRU Founding Chair Prof Tasneem Siddiqui thinks reducing migration costs through regularising middlemen is possible.

Since middlemen are not recognised by law, they largely remain "invisible" in the labour migration cycle, she said.

"When you will deploy the licensed ones at the root level and the aspirant migrants are seeking services from only them, then the unscrupulous ones will be identified and ejected automatically."

During an online discussion of RMMRU held on November 29, Secretary at Ministry of Expatriates' Welfare Ahmed Munirus Saleheen said the government has agreed in principle to bring "middlemen" under a framework.

Anisul Islam Mahmud, chairman of the parliamentary committee on the expatriates' welfare ministry, told the discussion BMET should be the main focal point for the registration.

Prof Tasneem said there should be a centralised system for the registration so that a recruiting agency will be able to deploy any of the registered middlemen if it wants.

Baira Secretary General Shameem Ahmed Chowdhury Noman stressed the need for developing a centralised database for direct recruitment of workers from the grassroots level.

"Reduction of migration cost is a concern of all. So, adding a layer of stakeholders may affect that policy," he said.

Agencies are more or less dependent on the existing process of recruitment through middlemen due to the absence of such a database, he added.

Prof Tasneem said middlemen have been providing services in the sector for more than three decades.

And migrant rights groups had been campaigning for either abolition or regulation of middlemen since 2001. A new campaign for their regulation was launched in 2016 which gained pace the following year.

When RMMRU talked with grassroots-level people, despite being aware of fraudulence, they intended to handle the situation with middlemen locally instead of making a complaint to BMET or the courts, she added.

Asked for a reason, they cited that middlemen were well known to them, she further said.

Around 7.5 million Bangladeshi migrants are living abroad, sixth among labour-sending countries, according to an IOM report published this year.

Government officials say more than one crore Bangladeshis live in over 160 countries.

Mawla also served as secretary in various government ministries. He was director general of Bangla Academy from December 31, 1982 to March 3, 1986.

He was among those who had a significant contribution in giving the monthlong "Amar Ekushey Boi Mela" an official shape and the vibrant attributes that have persisted till today.

His role in renovating the historic Burdwan building, organising the first national folklore workshop and giving fellowships to folklorists like Aroj Ali Matubbar and Khoda Baksh Sai were some other notable achievements of Mawla.

He was also keen on publishing books on the history of Bangla literature and the Language Movement.

Mawla was born in Dhaka on October 1, 1940.

His notable poetry titles include Nimagna, Ki Kore Pabo, Mati Here Jai, Shawla o Dinghi, Pure Pure, Ai din Mitthey, Bandana Bristir and Peyecho Ki.

He also wrote plays in verse like Ami Noi, The Jallianwala Bagh and translated "Brand", a play by Norwegian playwright Henrik Ibsen.

Mawla also edited a two-part collection of poems written by Rabindranath Tagore and wrote children's literature like Parte Chai Goyenda Boi.

For his contribution to literature he received the Bangla Academy Literary Award and Bangla Academy Rabindra Award, Ahsan Habib Smrity Puroshkar and other accolades.
