Farakka Barrage spells disaster

Riverine routes shrink by 300 kilometres

The country's riverine routes were shrunk by nearly 300 kilometres in last 14 years due to the impact of Farakka Barrage, reports UNB.

Shipping and IWTA Minister MK Anwar stated this in parliament on Monday replying to a question from Prof. Rafiqul Islam of Awami League.

Replying to another question from Sardar Shakwat Hossain Bakul (BNP), Anwar said the Bangladesh Shipping Corporation incurred a loss of Tk. about 80 crore last year.

There are 39 sea-going vessels under the Shipping Corporation and 18 belonging to private owners, the minister said.

By Bangladesh Shipping Corporation (BSC) and 18 under private ownerships plying in the international routes.

Replying to a question from Sardar Sakhawat Hossain (BNP-Narsinghdi) the Shipping Minister said that ships owned by the BSC had earned Taka 146.96 crore during 1989-90 financial year while the earnings by ships under private ownership amounted to Taka 41.63 crore during the same period.

In reply to a supplementary question from Mr AKM Jahangir Hossain (AL-Patua) the Minister said during the same period BSC had spent Taka 228 crore.

Replying to a question from Prof. Rafiqul Islam (AL-Jessore), the Shipping Minister said Bangladesh had 5,968 kilometers of land water ways. He said during 1976, the navigable inland water way was 6,310 kilometers.

In reply to a supplementary question, the Minister said the navigability of the inland water ways was reducing due to the effect of the Farakka. He said flows in the rivers had declined and they were silted because of the effect of the Farakka.

The length of the riverine routes was 6,310 km in 1975 and was reduced to 5,968 km at present.

BSS adds: MK Anwar told the Jatiya Sangsad that Bangladesh had 30 merchant ships, 21 owned

Dhaka Day by Day

A Glory Fading Out

by Fayza Haq

Ragged, faded and torn in the folds are the fragments of Jamdane saris that hang in Is-lampur shops, which a few decades ago housed the Muslim of international fame. From the folds of grubby covering cloth, the shopkeepers bring out bits and pieces of plain imitation Muslim, sold as curios to foreigners for Tk. 250 at tourist centres.

Just as the spirits are dampened at the Is-lampur sales centres due to many told and untold reasons, the Jamdane workers at Demra are far from being enthusiastic about their work. Struggling 14 hours a day, proceeding at the rate of six inches of stitches in two hours. They earn only Tk 250 per week.

They complain that their saris which used to sell at Tk 210 now go for Tk 160 only. The price barely covers the cost of production it is reported, and with lack of patronage of co-operatives and go-betweens that sell the sari in Dhaka, the number of looms in a village like Shiddhirganj has dwindled from 500 to 250.

Out of the 950 workers in the village most of them belong to the older generation, the younger ones not being inclined to join their parents due to poor remuneration.

Despite working from early hours till late at night the Jamdane workers are discouraged and hampered in their work. They have even the problem of cotton yarn which they once obtained at Tk. 20 and which they now get at Tk. 80.

Yet Muslim is a fabric known even in Europe in the first century of Christian era. It was highly prized by the ladies of the court of Imperial Rome in the days of luxury and refinement in the form of "sario, vestes."

Empress Noor Jehan greatly encouraged the manufacture of Muslim in the country, and under her patronage the fabric from Dhaka acquired great celebrity. This became at times, the fashionable dress of the Omrah at the Imperial and Vice-regal courts of India.

The fine fabrics, exquisitely delicate, were styled in the figurative language of the east. They were known as the webs of woven wind "Aberoan", running water, and "Shabnam" or morning dew. Jamdane remained the chef d'oeuvre of the celebrated Bengal weaver. There was the "Doreca" or the one with the double thread and the "Charkonna" with the chequered design.

Seen under the microscope the Muslim thread is one part of fifteen thousand parts of an inch. It is flat and ribbon shaped and looks like a roughly made hair bristle. The transparent effect goes opaque when many threads are collected together.

With the decline of the Moghul rule came the decline of Muslim. This was although in 1836 it was acknowledged to be superior to productions of the textile mills in any country by the British themselves who described it as "the finest thread that is used at Dhaka for weaving is spun here and woven into Muslim which is in proportion to 7200 yards to one tola of 180 grains of weight of cotton." Despite the dedicated workmanship and favourable patronage of the well-to-do, at a time, as early as 1844 the Muslim industry was predicted as a dying one in the report on the "Decline of Dacca Muslim Industry" by then Dhaka Commissioner, Mr Dunbar.

The fall of foreign trade in Dhaka was attributed to modern inventions in steam and machinery, introduced in the manufactures in England, whereby the spinning of thread and weaving of cloth was obtained at a cheaper rate than could be done by the Dhakahandloom. This was notwithstanding the extreme cheapness of manual labour of this kind in this part of Bengal.

Spinning which afforded employment to a large section of the population was now almost entirely superseded at Dhaka at a cheaper rate than the local thread of the same quality.

Weaving had been less affected than spinning but it had nevertheless been "much affected by the comparative cheapness of the English clothes and the ready markets they met all over India at that time."

It was estimated that one and a half lakh rupees value of English cotton clothes were annually imported to Dhaka in the mid-nineteenth century.

Imposition of heavy duty on importation of Indian Muslim into Britain whilst English cotton manufacturing was yet in its infancy, had unfavourable effect on export.

After 1947, Muslim Bengal remained under the domination of the then West Pakistan where Dhaka and its sister towns were regarded as dumping grounds of manufacture of goods of the then West Pakistan. It was natural that there would be little sympathetic patronage of the Jamdane and other imitation Muslim material. Women preferred and still go in for less expensive and more washable and synthetic saris. The quality of the sari in Demra and Tangal have not improved over the years and there is little hope of their improvement with time, as they are bound to be superseded by wash-and-wear fabrics which last longer and are both easier to wear and keep clean.

The total number of the implements used in converting the raw material into thread and weaving the latter into exquisite Jamdane is said to be 126. They are principally composed of bamboo and reed and are very simple. The thread is dressed with starch made of parched rice, and after exposure to the sun for some time is wound off upon two small wheels which are held by the weaver, one in each hand, as he forms the warp. The latter operation is done between four bamboo sticks.

An instrument like a comb is used to separate the threads of the warp, every alternate thread of which passes through the corresponding loop or ring of thread chain which is connected with the gear above the threadles below. The most favourable time for weaving the fine Muslins is during the rains, at which season the moisture in the atmosphere prevents the thread from breaking.

Jamdane carries the legacy of Muslim, the glory that was.

'VAT makes sweetmeat trade sour'

Dhaka Mohanagari Missionary Byaboshayee Kalyan Samity on Monday urged the Government to exempt the sweetmeat business from the VAT system considering the interest of the raw material suppliers as well as large number of people employed in this trade, reports BSS.

Addressing a Press conference at the National Press Club, Samity's President Alhaj Farun-ur-Rashid said that enforcement of VAT system on sweetmeat business would invite a drastic fall in the number of consumers resulting in sharp effect on the milk supplier. "If we close our business houses, at least 200,000 people will be jobless," he said urging the government to give a second thought over this vital business in case of imposing VAT system on it.
