PARIS, Jan 17: France has agreed to sell Pakistan three minehunters, Pakistani offi cials said on Thursday, but the outcome of a request by visiting Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif for mirage combat planes remained unclear, reports Reuter.

Thousands of people celebrate peace pact signing

Salvadoran civil war ends

MEXICO CITY, Jan 17: Salvadoran government and rebel leaders have signed a hard-won pact putting a formal end to 12 years of civil war that left at least 75,000 people dead, reports AP.

Citizens of this war-weary nation joyously welcomed peace with rival downtown block parties that underscored how long and uphill the road to reconciliation will be.

Tens of thousands gathered in two central plazas, just a block apart, after President Alfredo Cristiani and leftist rebel chiefs signed in Mexico City a historic accord ending 12 years of civil war.

In Plaza Civica guerrillas and supporters of the leftist Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front gathered. The neighbouring plaza Liberated was the scene of festivities Republican Nationalist gotiations. Alliance, the rightist party known as Arena Celebrants in both squares danced until Friday's wee hours to Latin rhythms provided by a half dozen bands. The atmosphere in both was of jubilation and thanksgiving. But both festivals were also militantly partisan. "The long night of El Salvador is ending," said UN Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali. "It is a time to rejoice and celebrate." The pact calls for a February I cease-fire, the eventual dis mantling of guertila forces, the reduction of the military by half, reforms in the judicial and electoral systems and land

At a news conference, President Alfredo Cristiani said that with a peace accord signed he had no problem envisioning that former rebels could take power in El Salvador by way of elections. "There's absolutely no fear," Cristiani said. "If they do it, they're welcome. This is democracy. But they must do it within the democratic frame-

A short time later he returned home to San Salvador. where wildly cheering crowds celebrated the end of the country's worst civil upheaval.

Mexican President Carlos Salinas de Gortari was host for the ceremony, which was also a summit. Seven other Latin American presidents and Spanish Prime Minister Felipe Gonzalez witnessed the signing of the document.

US Secretary of State James A Baker III represented President Bush.

The signers included five rebel leaders and five government representatives headed by Presidency Minister Oscar Santamaria.

Cristiani admitted there may be diehards who do not want to give up the fight in El Salvador, and he said he would fight them.

He named no names, but it is well known that towards the end of the peace negotiations in New York in December he had to contend with ultrarightist groups in the military who opposed giving any concessions to the rebels.

Now that peace has been accepted, said Arturo Rivera V Damas, the archbishop of San Salvador. "there must be justice and truth and later this will be crowned with pardon and forgiveness."

'In this new era we must make an effort in favour of rebuilding the Salvadoran family," said the churchman, who was a key link between the government and the rebels in the early stages of the peace Santamari referred to the guerillas as "countrymen" and predicted 'a new stage in the history of the country will be written." Schafik Handal, who headed the rebel negotiators, said the rebels had "tried time and time again to try to change the country through pacific means but this way was closed to us. "We had to pick up arms." he said. "It was necessary and legitimate." "Long live peace. Long live

El Salvador. Long Live Mexico." he concluded." In mid-plaza, 19th century hero Gerardo Barrios, namesake of the military academy. sat high on his metal horse, a red flag emblazoned "FMLN" raised incongruously in his hand The Salvadoran war is the last major conflict in the region, where instability began in 1979 with the Sandinista uprising against the Somoza dictatorship in Nicaragua and quickly spread to El Salvador.

American health experts could recommend its approval at the end of the month. The condom is unlikely to replace the pill for contracep-tion, but has been widely welcomed because it allows women to take action to prevent AIDS and other Sexually transmitted diseases. The vaginal condom is a large, lubricated, poloyurethane adaptation of the male version. It is about seven inches long. has flexible rings at both ends and is inserted like a diaphragm. The inner ring fits behind the pubic bone and the outer ring remains outside the body Unlike the diaphragm, which only stops sperm from passing the cervix and thus prevents pregnancy, the female condom also protects the entire vagina and labia from any HIV virus on a penis or in sperm. The concept was developed by a Danish gynecologist in a bid to tackle infertility problems, according to Dr Patrick Rowe of the World Health Organization.

"Our interest in the condom is not as a contraceptive, but rather as an additional barrier method against AIDS", he said. He said the female condom would never replace the male version -but it would make a big difference for women with more than one sexual partner who are at risk from AIDS.

BELGRADE, Jan 17: Serbia and Croatia headed today for a new confrontation two days after Croatia won international recognition, denting the prospects of ending six months of fighting in Yugoslavia, reports Reuter.

Some 45 United Nations military observers will be deployed in Croatia today to monitor a two-week-old ceasefire which has raised hopes that the U N will send in a peacekeeping force of about 10,000 troops.

Separate talks matching the Israelis with Syria and Lebanon ended on Wednesday with no progress reported.

Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir's right-wing coalition was already under intense pressure not to make concessions, with two small ultra-nationalist parties that give it a slender parliamentary majority threatening to leave the government.

The move could trigger early elections in Israel and put the peace process on hold. From the United States viewpoint, the main achievement was that Arab-Israeli peace talks, which only a year ago would have considered a wild dream, are fast becoming a matter of routine.

The only way to move down this road is for the parties to engage in direct discussions of their differences. That is what they're now doing and we think that is significant achievement," said State Department Spokesman Richard Boucher.

The parties said on Wednesday they had agreed to hold a new round of talks in February, probably February 13-23. But agreement was not so close on the location. While the Arabs want to come back to Washington, Israel is insisting the talks move closer to the Middle East.

AFP report adds: The United States is prepared to intervene in bilateral Israeli-Arab peace talks to decide on the venue and date of the next round if the parties cannot agree, a senior U S official said.

. "It is our hope, as it has been from the beginning, that the parties would work these things out themselves," President George Bush's National Security Adviser Brent Scowcroft said.

"But as in the past, if it is necessary for the United States to play a role that the parties cannot play themselves, then we will do it," he said in an interview with four international news agencies.

LONDON, Jan 17: Leaders on nine former Soviet republics met in Moscow yesterday to to discuss military and economic issues and seven agreed on a common oath for members of a combined force. Tass news agency said, reports

The agency, monitored in London by the BBC, also said the meeting, presided by President Boris Yeltsin of Russia, agreed to set up a commission to study a conflict between Russia and Ukraine over sharing out the former

He added that seven states which had adopted a decision on creating a single armed force had adopted a common oath for that force.

However, in depth discussion of military issues was put off until early next month, according to a brief statement to journalists by Yeltsin, Tass said. This was because the leaders had not had time to acquaint themselves with documents relating to the issues.

The meeting started with the leaders of Armenia, Azerbaijan , Belarus, Kazakhstan, Russia, Tadzhikistan, and Turkmenistan in attendance They were joined later by those of Ukraine and Kirghuzstan. The leaders of Moldova and Uzbekistan did not attend

Voschanov said the leaders signed a total of seven agreements at the talks, which he described as " on the whole, successful" He said the Black Sea commission comprised officials from Russia . Ukraine and the military command. A similar decision had been adopted on the Caspian Sea Fleet, comprising representatives from Russia and Azerbattan as well as the armed forces. Voshchanov said.
