Seminar on Kerry:

Better late than never

By Staff Correspondent William Kerry was an Englishman who wrote the first grammar for the Bengali language. Most people know him also as the printer of the first Bengali newspaper. in the nearly two centuries since, little research has been done on this remarkable man, who came to India as missionary in 1793 and stayed on to make an essential contribution to the culture of the region.

In a timely seminar, Editor of the weekly Dhaka Shaftkul Islam Yunus and Secretary of the Bangladesh Itihash Gabeshana Parishad Jajabar Osman brought together a number of experts on Monday on the occasion of Kerry's birth anniver-

The two parts of the seminar were devoted to respectively, William Kerry and Bengali society of his age, and William Kerry. Bengali newspapers and the use of Bengali. Keynote speaker of the morning session Razia Khan Amin outlined the dedication of Kerry to social causes such as the banning of 'Sati'. She spoke also of Kerry's interaction with noted activists Ram Mohan Roy and Vidyasagar. It was due to Kerry's efforts that Bengali came to be widely used as a medium of instruction.

Khan concluded by saying that the country needed more men and women with Kerry's thirst for knowledge and social conscience.

Speakers after Khan underlined the need for more research on the man who published the first prose book in Bengali. Kerry first printed the monthly Digdarshan in 1818; this was followed by the first Bengali news publication Darpan in the same year.
