A Footwear for All

by A S M Nurunnabi

A pair of sponge sandals is very common, yet it seems to have something unique about it. There are probably few households in the country which do not possess at least a pair of sponge sandals. From this angle, it may be considered a versatile footwear. Originally it was called Hawafi sandal, probably from its large-scale use in the Hawafi Islands. From these islands, we have also got models of Hawafi shirts which are so popular in our country and also in other countries of south and southeast Asia where climatic conditions make them a comfortable informal wear for males.

We may trace the origin of sponge sandal to the late 50s. It was then a prized object for many. On account of its limited availability, its price was comparatively high, and many people used to be on the look out for the shops which offered this item for sale. An old timer recalls, that back in 1960, at an industrial exhibition held that year in Dhaka, limited quantity of this item was put up for sale at a stall. There was a heavy rush of prospective buyers at that stall. When the stock of the item ran out before all the customers could be satisfied, pandemonium broke loose, and the police had to intervene to restore order.

Many years have passed by. People of this generation may now feel amused that earlier generation could lose their temper over such a small thing as sponge sandal. It is the generation gap which has turned a prized object into a common thing.

In the present changed conditions, the sponge sandal has consolidated its position as the most widely used footwear in the country. The comparatively high price which it previously commanded has slowly come down to a level which a vast majority of consumers can easily afford.

The popularity of this footwear is due to several factors. Besides its favourable price, it is light in weight and can be worn for all informal occasions. For common use in the household, its position is unrivalled. In the monsoon season, its usefulness in rural areas is undeniable.

The large-scale market for this footwear has proved a bonanza for its manufacturers who apply their capital and technology for making new designs in different colours, which pose a threat to large-scale sale of leather sandals. The threat becomes more real, because the sponge sandal has a vast network of selling outlets both in the urban and rural areas. At numerous haats and bazars in rural areas, it enjoys a monopoly of sales with village folks who are attracted by its low price and durability. It is also sold in the urban residential areas. Perhaps in the footwear trade, no other item commands a greater turn over than the sponge sandal.

A group of hawkers of this were run this business on the periphery of a city bazar. Mofiz represents such a group. He has his wares neatly arranged in two or three baskets. When a prospective customer comes, a lot of competition ensues in the group to win him over to his side. Each sale involves a lot of haggling, since there is no fixed price. If a customer is not accustomed to bargaining, he is likely to pay more than the actual price. Mofiz said that his earning from the sales averaged Tk 50 to 60 daily. His sales, however, register a big jump on the occasions of big festivals.

Many of our people may not have raincoats to cover their body, but in all likelihood they may have a pair of sponge sandals to cover their feet. Thus it satisfies the requirement of a footwear at the grass-roots level.

When on any day in summer or winter, one finds on busy streets, a day labourer or a pushcart driver performing his strenuous tasks with sponge sandals on his feet to save him from heat, one feels happy that this unique footwear has been put to a really good use.

A two-day photo exhibition began yesterday (Monday) at the National Museum on the occasion of 57th anniversary of birth of late President Ziaur Rahman, reports UNB.

Minister for labour and Manpower Abdul Mannan Bhuiyan inaugurated the exhibition arranged by the Zia Smriti Sangrakhan (preservation) Parishad.

Addressing the function, the minister called upon the sponsors of the exhibition to preserve the works and memories of great men for presenting the true history to the future generation.

The people are inspired by the works of great men and engage in nation building activity, he said.

Recalling the contribution of late leader to the Liberation War and post-liberation nation building mission, Mannan Bhuiyan said the history of bold leadership of Zia would inspire the future generation for ages.

Later, the minister visited the exhibition. Over 100 photographs on Zia's life and works are on display.

Wage Commission report to be announced soon: Salam

BNP Secretary-General and LGRD and Cooperatives Minister Barrister Abdus Salam Talukder said here yesterday that the government was determined to serve the cause of the peasants, workers and other working people of the country, reports BSS.

Addressing as the chief guest a discussion, organised by Jatiyabadi Samik Dal at BCIC auditorium here on the occasion of Shaheed President Ziaur Rahman's 57th birth anniversary, the LGRD Minister said that the report of the Wage Commission has been submitted to the Prime Minister yesterday and it would be announced this month for the welfare of the working class.

Presided over by Samik Dal President Iskander Ali, the function was addressed, among others, by Works Minister Barrister Rafiqul Islam Mia, Labour and Manpower Minister Abdul Mannan Bhuiyan, Vice President of Samik Dal Abdul Malek, its General Secretary Nazrul Islam Khan and other office bearers.

Referring to President Zia's proud declaration that he was a farmer, Barrister Talukder said that Shaheed President Zia had devoted all his energies to change the lot of the commonman.

The BNP Secretary General

said Zia knew that without improving the lot of the commonman, the overall development of the country was not possible. That was why, he said, Zia had introduced politics of production. He pointed out that the economic of the country got a boost because of production-oriented politics of President Zia.

The LGRD Minister said that the present BNP government is working relentlessly to implement the 19-point programme of Shaheed President Zia for national development.

Talukder also said it was the pledge of the BNP to restart the closed mills and factories of the country. He said this particular pledge was materialised by the party by re-starting some mills and factories after its coming to power.

He said the economy ruined by the autocratic rule could not be recovered overnight. In this context, he said that it was also not possible to re-start all the closed mills and factories overnight.

Works Minister Rafiqul Islam said that Shaheed Zia had given a sense of direction to the nation during a crucial hour. He said Shaheed Zia did not only declare the Liberation War, but he also took part in the war to liberate the country.

Labour Minister Abdul Mannan Bhuiyan said that the present government was quite aware of and sympathetic to genuine demands of the working people. He pointed out that till announcement of the wage commission report, the working people would continue to get Taka 250 interim allowance.

Experts seek community participation to reduce severity of diarrhoea

A three-day conference on "Health Research and Policy Perspectives" ended here yesterday with a call for greater community participation to popularize the Oral Rehydration Therapy (ORT) for reducing the severity of diarrhoeal diseases, reports UNB.

The annual scientific conference of the International Centre for Diarrhoeal Disease Research, Bangladesh (ICDDR,B) also stressed the need for promoting family planning programmes in the country.

Speakers at the conference pointed out that proper nutrition of mothers and children was a critical factor in developing resistance against common illnesses.

The conference, designed to share the results of research done at the ICDDR,B among health care workers and health policy planners in Bangladesh, was earlier inaugurated by Health Minister Chowdhury Kamal Hossain Yusuf.

About 150 experts, officials and workers from health institutions and health centres of Bangladesh government, NGOs, donor agencies and the media participated in the conference.

Over 60 scientific papers dealing with diarrhoea, nutrition and maternal and child health with family planning were presented at the conference.

Most speakers highlighted the beneficial effects of using ORT which had been found to reduce the duration and severity of diarrhoeal diseases.

They said new research results are awaited in the field of development and efficacy of other ORS formulations, made of such constituents as rice and maize.
