Krishibid Institution

It regretted that parliament members while discussing agriculture and the problems of farmers in the House on Monday had sidetracked the role of agriculturists.

In a statement, Secretary General of the Institution Jabed Igbal said by dint of hard labour the agriculturists had reached modern farm technology to the doorsteps of 60 per cent farmers of the country.

He said planning, research and field level technology transfer by them had contributed to this year's bumper crop production alongside the main role of the farmers.

The Krishibid Institution Secretary General pointed out that three crops were being produced instead of one in many areas of the country as the outcome of research by the agriculturists.

They also innovated new high yielding varieties and technology to tackle natural calamities like flood, drought and cyclone, he added. He called upon both ruling party and opposition members to inspire the agriculturists, particularly those at the field level, to carry on their duties by recognising their contribution.
