Beijing moving faster to combat inflation

BEIJING, Feb 28: China's economic growth has advanced at double-digit speed for the past two years, reports Xinhua. The country's inflation rate climbed to 13 per cent nationwide last year when the central government unveiled its fiscal reforms and unified the exchange rate at the start of 1994, it declared war against inflation by repeated pledges of tighter control on credit and money supply as well as on investment in fixed

The question is, however, will China's battle against inflation be successful.

The inflationary pressure is obvious with last year's 1,300 billion yuan spent on fixed assets, excessive money supply over the past few years and the bigger-than-ever stride in price reforms in 1993.

Meanwhile, higher production costs will force some enterprises to raise the prices of their products in order to maintain a balanced book. A vicious cycle is thus set.

The biggest pressure comes from local enthusiasms to start more construction projects, and with last year's projects to be continued and new ones started, the central bank faces mounting pressure to issue more money.

But this year the central government indicates a strong determination to fight against inflation. It must do so because it wants the economic boom to continue. It also needs a good economic and social environment to push ahead reforms in other fields including state enterprises, investment system as well as finance.

Therefore, the central authorities target this year's growth at around 9 per cent, hoping to achieve a 'soft landing of some kind.

Meanwhile, the central bank has repeatedly vowed to keep a tighter rein on credit and money supply in the new year. According to central bank sources, the total money supply for 1994 will not exceed last year's level, the increase in bank lending will be kept on a par with that of last year. which means a reduced rate of credit increase.

Recently, a senior official of the central bank disclosed that the central bank had no intention of making changes in interest rates in the foreseeable future.

After two rises in 1993, the interest rate for one-year deposits stands at a relatively high level of 10.8 per cent.

A month earlier, the state council issued a circular demanding a strict grip on fixed asset investment. It stressed that the government would, in principle, not allow new construction projects to start this Coupled with the state council's move, the central bank has worked out a set of rules for banks across the country to follow, which feature tougher conditions extending loans for fixed assets investment. Vice-Premier Zhu Rongji, who is also the central bank governor, told the banks not to provide loans to unauthorised projects, while the credit quotas must not exceed the planned figure.

To reach an understanding between the central government and different areas. keeping the general balance in demand and supply while maintaining a relatively high growth' is expected to become one of the main points of discussion during the National People's Congress due to open on March 10.

This year, the government will limit bond issuing by localities and enterprises.

Clinton admn submits bill on export-control system

WASHINGTON, Feb 28: The Clinton administration has submitted long-awaited legislation for reforming the US export-control system, but exporters called the proposal far from adequate, according to USIS release.

At the same time, the administration announced significant relaxation of controls on exports of computers.

The legislation offered February 24 involves the Export Administration Act (EAA), expiring June 30 and last overhauled in 1979. The EAA aimed to prevent export of advanced technology to the former Soviet Union and Soviet bloc countries.

Two goals - difficult to reconcile - permeate the EAA legislative proposal: moving away from the Cold War threat to the present threat of proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, while not putting US industry at a disadvantage with foreign competitors.

According to Barry Carter, acting under secretary of commerce, the administration bill would use multilateral controls where possible, especially working through the Missile Technology Control Regime, the Australia Group (concerned with chemical and biological weapons) and the Nuclear Suppliers Group.

The bill would continue use of unilateral controls "when absolutely necessary," however, Carter said, to promote such US foreign-policy goals as anti-terrorism, human rights and stability in unstable regions of the world.

Industry groups complained especially about continued use of unilateral controls "where the only entity harmed are American companies, not the targeted country," said Wilard Workman, Vice President of the US Chamber of Commerce.

Industry spokesmen complained also that often multilateral controls amount to unilateral controls because only the United States bothers to enforce them.

Neither Tehran nor Bonn have disclosed the exact amount of the loan, or the condition under which it was granted. However the experts put the figure at three billion marks (two billion dollars) at least, but said it most likely neared 4.5 billion marks (three billion dollars)

The sum would allow Iran to pay back its current overdue debts of around two billion dollars to the German credit insurance company, Hermes, and another 600 to 700 million dollars which will be due by the end of 1994.

Iranian Deputy Foreign Minister Mahmud Vaezi, whose trip to Bonn last week is believed to have accelerated the settlement, told the daily Tehran Times on Sunday that Iran had agreed to pay Germany around three billion dollars within five years, starting 1996.

It was Iran's first bilateral agreement with a foreign creditor to refinance its guaranteed public debt, which was traditionally to have been settled multilaterally within the framework of the Club of

Because of the scattered nature of the diamond trade now, the buyer may not be aware of the range of sizes and colours available here," said Padmanabhan.
