Better service in population programme suggested

By Staff Correspondent

Speakers at a discussion on population yesterday called upon the policy planners to keep in mind the overall wel fare of the women while chart ing an effective population programme.

They also suggested evolving a better service delivery mechanism in population programmes based on the "shared responsibility" of both men and Naripakkha, a women's organisation, held the discussion at its Dhanmondi office in the city. Nasrin Hug, coordinator of the body, and Rachel Kyte, an independent consultant to the International Women's Health Coalition, spoke.

The discussion was organised in view of the forthcoming International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD) that starts early September in Cairo, Egypt.

The speakers pointed out that the global perspective on population issues has experienced a qualitative change over the years and the upcoming conference reflects the active role played by different women's organisations.

Nasrin Huq said women should not be considered "tools" to control population.

Rather population control could be achieved through enhancement of women's position in the society and safe guarding their rights to safe reproductive technologies, she

Speaking on the draft final report prepared for approval of the Cairo conference, Nasrin said the document was different from the ones that came out of the earlier population conferences in its strategies towards the population.

The draft report of the ICPD included 78 new approaches, she pointed out.

Rachel Kyte said that nations participating in the conference were still looking upon some of the outstanding issues like the link between consumption pattern of the industrialised nations and the population growth in the developing countries, recognition of the individual rights to reproductive technologies and allocation of resources.

Bangladesh should emphasise on an integrated family planning programme rather than only focusing on decreasing contraceptive prevalence rate (CPR) or achieving NRR by the year 2000, she added.

A USAID-sponsored eight-member medical team from the International Centre for Diarrhoeal Disease Research, Bangladesh (ICDDR,B) left for the Zairean town of Goma July 26 to help the cholera victims among the Rwandan refugees there. The photograph was taken prior to their departure.
