Shared Experience puts on 'Mill On The Floss' today

By Staff Correspondent

Helen Edmundson's award winning adaptation of George Eliot's famous novel 'Mill on the Floss' opens at the National Museum this evening. The play is about Maggie Tulliver, who is disobedient and passionate and at odds with the simple provincial world into which she is born. In it the author ascribes the qualities of kindness and self-denial to women.

The play will be presented by Shared Experience Theatre and is sponsored by the British Council.

Nancy Meckler and Polly Teale are the co-directors, while Liz Ranken is responsible for the company.

Jonathan Cake, who has a BA (Hons) degree from Cambridge plays the protagonist's good looking admirer, who puts temptations in her way. Michale Matus, trained at the RADA Theatre acts the role of Phillip Wakem. Maggies other sensitive and intellectual friend, who is crippled. His and Maggie's families are not on speaking terms. Matus has worked in films and TV.

Simon Cox, who has Tom Tulliver's part, also works in films and TV. Clara Salaman takes the roles of Mrs Tulliver and Maggies' good looking fair ble for the movement, and Peter Salem handles the composition of the background music. Chris Davey sees to the lights, and Bunny Christie is the designer.

While the character of Maggie Tulliver is played by three different young actresses — Anne-Marie Duff, Catherine Cusack and Helen Schlesinger — Simon Andrews, trained at the Bristol Old Vic, plays the father, Mr Tulliver. Andrews, like all the other haired cousin Lucy Deane. Most of the actors handle more than one part, with Jonathan Cake dealing with five, and enjoying it too.

The company has performed at Bombay and Delhi, before coming to Bangladesh, and will be going to Sri Lanka as the last part of its tour. Apart from this evening's performance, there will be two other shows tomorrow at 2 pm and 7 pm.
