Teach indigenous languages in schools: Devasish

By Staff Correspondent

The Chakma chief. Raja Devasish Roy, vesterday called for the teaching of indigenous languages of the Chittagong Hill Tracts (CHT) people in schools, alongside Bengali and English.

He was speaking at a daylong function, organised by the Parbatya Bouddha Sangha (PBS), to present the life and culture of the indigenous communities held at the Sakyamuni Boudha Vihara in Mirpur

Each community (of the CHT) speaks in its won language and some, like the Chak mas and the Marmas, even have their own scripts," the Chakma chief pointed out adding, "rate of literacy would be much higher among such peoples if the children could study their own language at schools, side by side with Ben gali and English.

The function, organised by the PBS in collaboration with the Bangladesh Indigenous and Hill People's Association for Advancement (BIHPAA), was also addressed by PBS president Pragyanandha Mahathero. Nandit Roy and Prof Prananendu Chakma, Department of Management, DU.

The presentation was followed by a tour of the Banophool Children's Home, an orphanage-cum-school, run by the PBS at the Vihara site.

The day culminated in a cultural function. Members of the Renghuli Shilpi Gosthi of Rangamati and children of Banophool performed traditional dances and songs. An exhibition of handicraft and photographs of the CHT people was also organised on the
