For Morceli, it's just a piece of cake

LONDON, July 27: Noureddine Morceli resembles a highly specialised chef who can cook only six items, reports Reuter.

But the secret of his success is that he cooks them better than anybody else in the world.

"World record in the mile, 1981. sir? Certainly, that'll be with vou in 3 minutes 44.39 sec-

Morceli has been serving up world records now for four years since breaking the world indoor 1,500 metres mark in 1991.

Of more relevance to next month's proceedings in Gothenburg, he added the outdoor 1,500 in 1992. broke that again two weeks ago in Nice, set the mile record in 1993, the 3,000 in 1994 and the 2,000 this

His assault on his own world 1,500 record failed by just 15-100th of a second in Monte Carlo on Tuesday night but he already has his sights set on Sebastian Coe's longstanding 800 and 1,000 metres records both of which date back to the summer of

Morceli himself has often said that he wants to be remembered as the greatest middle-distance runner of all time and the way he has bitten such huge chunks off the records he has broken shows that he could well earn that

Like most good chefs Morceli has an almost insatiable appetite. And if the in gredients are just right he can devour many more world titles and world records.

'Adjustment policies of WB, IMF have failed to reduce poverty'

A British economist yesterday said the adjustment policies of World Bank and International Monetary Fund (IMF) created adverse effects on the poor and failed to reduce poverty, reports UNB.

The adverse effects could have been avoided, but the two international financial institutions (IFIs) didn't do much to this end, said Dr Frances Stewart. Director of Queen Elizabeth House at the University of Oxford.

Dr Stewart, now on a visit to Bangladesh, was deliveringa lecture on "Poverty and Adjustment: Options and Choices" organised by the Bangladesh Institute of Development Studies at its conference room in the city.

She cited the adjustment policies of the IMF and World Bank, being carried out by different countries, specially in Asia. Africa and Latin America, in favour of her contention.

The Oxford economist said though the Fund and the Bank are not primarily responsible for the adverse development for the poor in many countries, they did little or nothing to avoid that.

"Claiming innocence because of lack of responsibility for the initial causes is, in this context, akin to claiming no responsibility for not putting out a forest fire in vicinity, or failing to call in the fire brigade, on the grounds that someone else started it.

 While admitting that poverty has also worsened in countries without World Bank/IMF programmes, she said the developments that Dr Stewart said expansionary macro-policies should be considered for a growth through adjustment while the meso-policies should be reviewed and reformed.

She suggested that food subsidies received by the poor should be maintained emergency support policies like employment schemes, pensions and nutrition interventions introduced and condition of the poor monitored during the stabilisation programme.

The Chief Justice said there is nothing in the Reference which may be construed as encroaching upon the exclusive preserve of Parliament. However, while acknowledging that the questions referred to the court could have been decided by the Speaker in Parliament, he added that the court cannot assume that the Speaker had abdicated his authority or that anything had happened which was beyond the Speaker's authority.

"The questions referred to us relate to an interpretation of few words which are in connection with the Parliament, including Article 67(1) (b), but it thereby does not become an exclusive business of the Parliament to disentitle this court to pronounce upon the questions or to return the Reference on the ground of judicial self-restraint," he said in discarding the argument in favour of sending the Reference unanswered. "We do not think that the submissions are cogent enough to permit us to return the Reference unanswered.

The Chief Justice, however, made it clear that none of the questions required the court to make any determination of facts, namely, whether the seats of the Opposition members have fallen vacant due to their absence by walkout or boycott and whether 90 consecutive sitting days have already elapsed.

In discarding the argument as to why the physical absence of the members of the Opposition should not be construed as absence within the meaning of Article 67(1)(b) and be regarded as presence", the court countered strongly.

"For what good reason and for whose benefit such a distorted meaning should be put on the word 'absent' so as to exclude walkout and boycott by them? Does it enhance the cause of constitutionalism or the cause of an effective parliament by construing their absence as presence?" the Chief Justice asked. "We are confident that it does not. Rather, it subverts both," he said, adding that the scheme of the Constitution is that if a member is absent for 90 consecutive sitting days without leave of the Parliament, he or they would do so at the pain of vacating his or their seats. "The philosophy behind this is that his or their constituencies cannot be left unrepresented in Parliament for an indefinite period. There must be byelection in those seats for electing new members in their places to represent the people. This is the democratic and constitutional process," he reasoned.

The Chief Justice further observed: "In our view, walk-

The government counsel had argued that the prorogation period should be included because the member who is remaining absent between sessions remains absent on the day when the House is prorogued and also on the day when the House is next summoned, and further word because consecutive" means "continuous"
