

Dhaka Day by Day

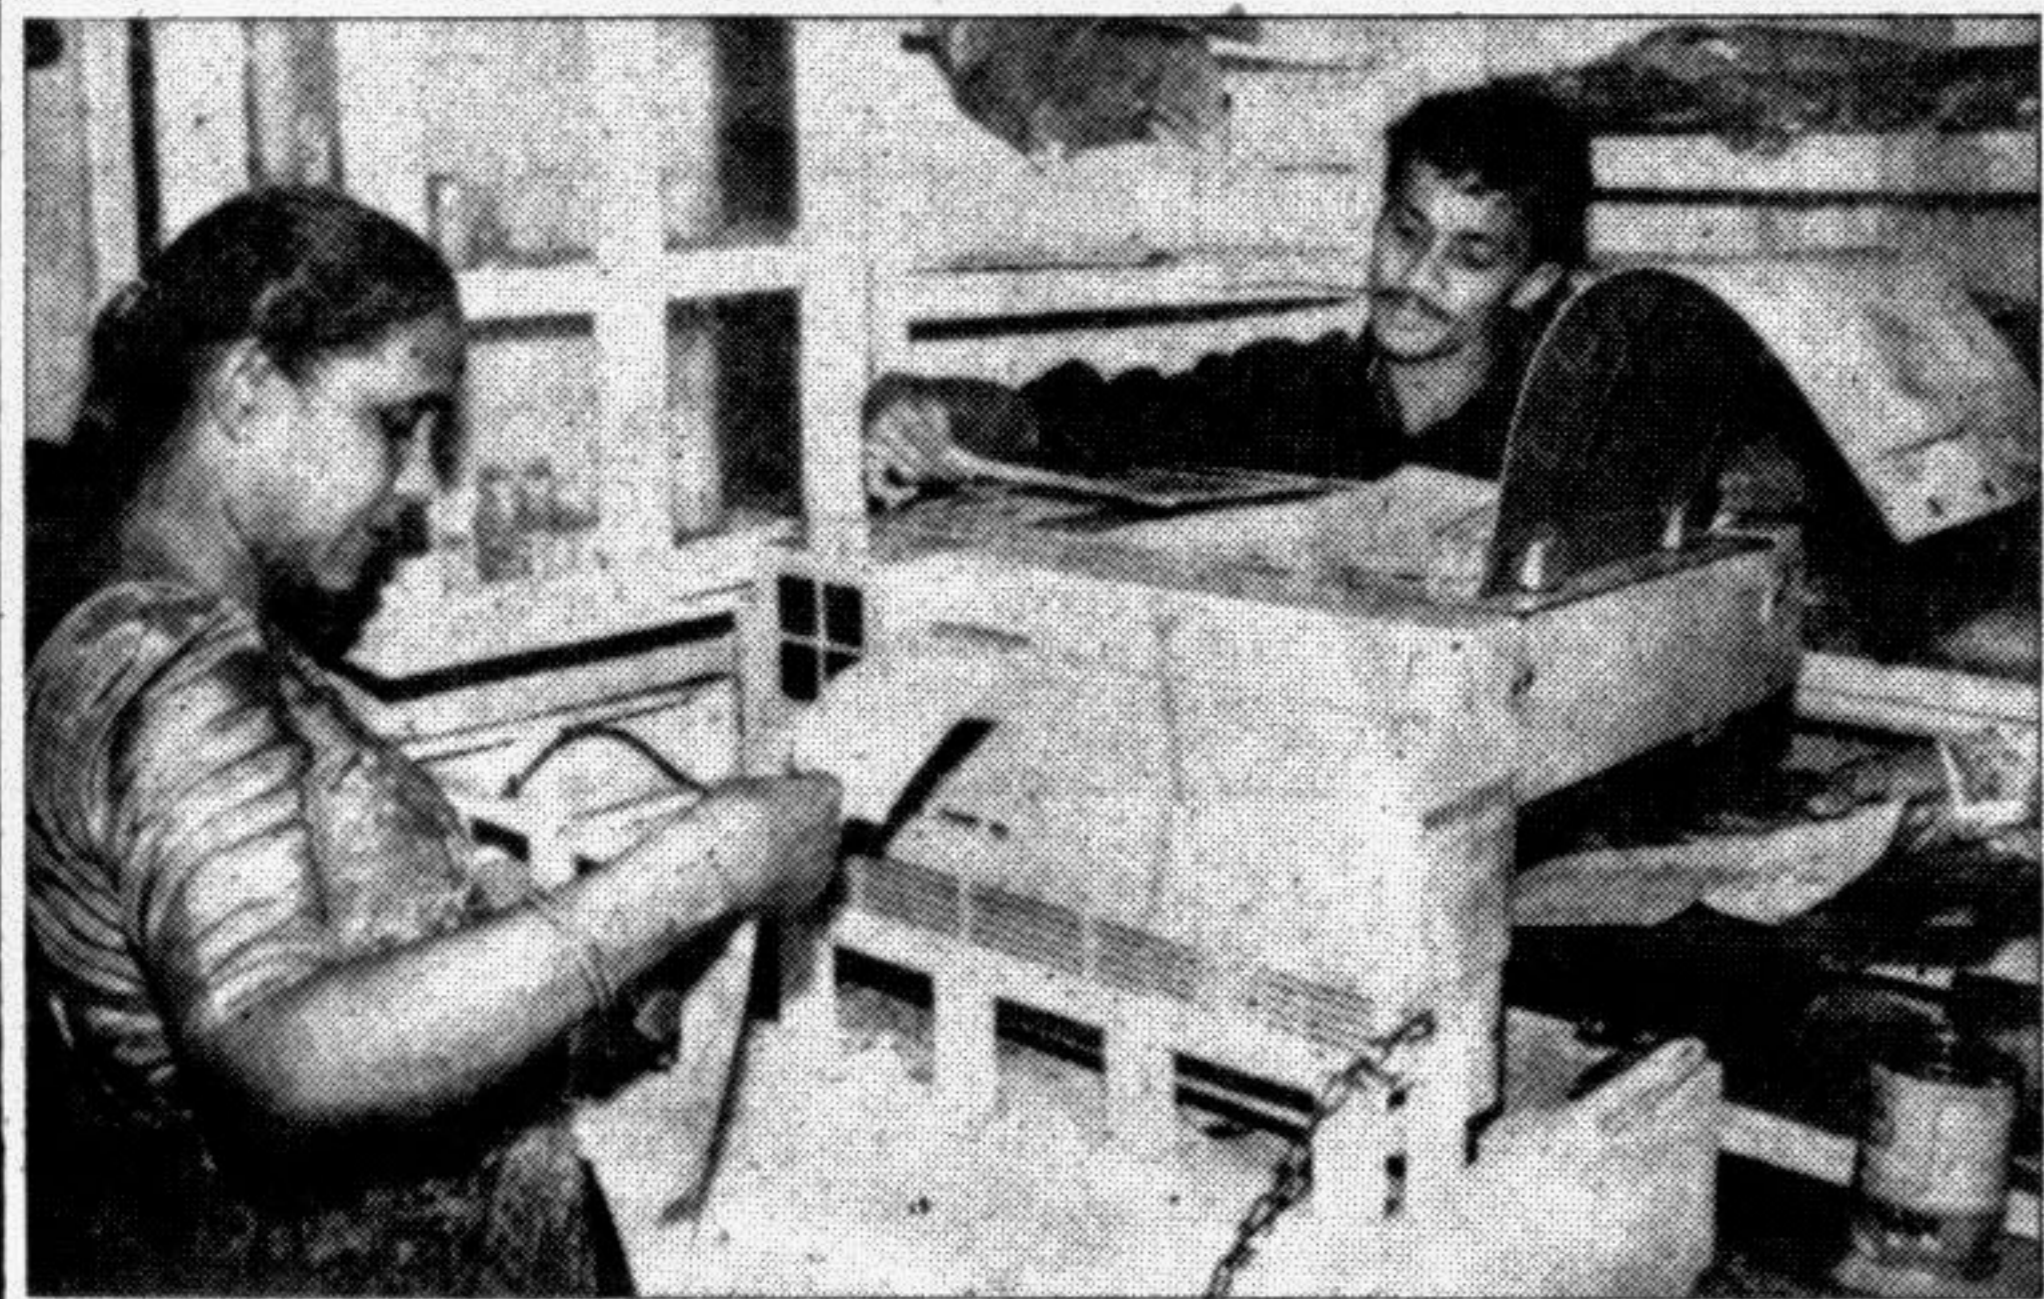

Copying for Convenience

by Tanya Mahnaz Haq

Nowadays students seem to have developed a new policy: why go through all the trouble of making notes or copying them by hand if there is the facility to photocopy them from library books or from a senior's notes? Even though this is the basic use of a photostat machine for the students; it certainly has other uses too on the campus (photocopying documents, certificates, official letters etc.). So no wonder, when upon entering the Arts Faculty of Dhaka University, amidst the endless chattering of the students, another sound can be heard if one listens carefully. This is the humming of the photostat machines, as they work throughout the day photocopying countless numbers of notes and documents. There are three little photostat shops just inside the main entrance of the Arts Faculty. Each has a couple of photostat machines and three or four young men working there. Their rate is Tk. 1 per sheet and the business is really booming! The shops open from 7 am and it seems as if the machines don't stop working until they close down at 5 pm.

Speaking to one of the young men working there, it was known, that these shops were started by an ex-student, who is the owner. The third one, with the name 'Bikalpa Photostat Centre' seems to be a venture of the Sonali Bank for the 'University Karma Sangsthan', according to the signboard. During the peak hours of the day, sometimes it is quite impossible to get near the shops, what with the students all falling over each other trying to get his or her work done as quickly as possible. In fact one can't help but wonder, with so many notes and books piling up, how on earth do they manage to complete their work in time? And how do they manage to distinguish one student's work from another; since they don't seem to have any orderly method of writing down names or anything? Whatever the case, it is very rarely that students have to complain of lost sheets. Even though sometimes, the quality of the photocopy is not good, due to the machine not working properly, most of the time they do manage to churn out good work. This is all part of their efficiency (a method behind the madness), and since students simply cannot do without them, all that can be said is, 'Keep up the good work.'

So easy to copy.
