Medieval cargo boat found in UK

LONDON, Aug 26: A me dieval boat, sunk in a river estuary off the coast of Wales about eight centuries ago, is emerging slowly from the mud with some of its cargo intact, reports AP.

Archaeologists say the 50foot (15 metre) vessel has been well preserved under the bed of the Severn River near Magor, Gwent, and is one of the most significant maritime finds in Britain.

About half the sunken boat, including part of the bow, has survived a yard (metre) below the river bed.

Project manager Nigel Nayling said tree-ring dating of the ship's planks showed i was Medieval and built after the mid-12th century. Remains of its cargo of iron ore also were found.

It was spotted by chance last year by local nature reserve warden Derek Upton, who noticed a shape protruding from the thick mud.

Mud-splattered experts from Glamorgan-Gwent Archaeological Trust were excavating the site, working at low tide behind a protec tive wall of sandbags. They plan to place a cradle be neath the boat and raise it gently by crane.

"Work is going wel although everything is completely dependent on the tides because the wreck is about 500 yards (metres) off shore. It is a very treacherous environment out there, with quicksands and deep pools We do not allow anyone out there alone," he said.

Dr Mark Redknap, of the National Museum of Wales said: "It is a most exciting find and could give us a great deal of new information about boat-building methods and commercial activity on the river at the time."

Overnight interest rates soared to 1,000 per cent.

Chubais said the central bank had bought a total of 600 billion roubles (135 million dollars) worth of securities on the open market on Thursday, the influx of roubles helped reduce interest rates to 150-200 per cent.

But dealers said on Friday that the money market was still frozen and there was no

Manufacturing of new rickshaws in Natore continuing despite ban

NATORE, Aug 26: Several factories are making rick shaws everyday despite the ban on their manufacture due to increasing traffic jam in the Pourashava area, reports

According to pourashava sources, the manufacturing of new rickshaws has been banned considering inconvenience and the traffic jam created by it.

Some 3,700 rickshaws have valid licence and 1,500 pullers possess licences in the pourashava. A traffic sergeant said, nobody knows the exact number of rickshawas now plying on the streets of the town.

A garage owner said the manufacturing of rickshaws is a lucrative business and it is not easy to stop the business by imposing so-called restriction only. Large scale smuggling of spare parts from India and so -called eye wash vigil on its manufacture by authorities made the business lucrative. At present, it costs around Tk 7,000 to manufacture a rickshaw. Moreover, traffic jam by the rickshaws is a common feature in the busy areas especially in Chhayabani Cinema hall, Modernised Sadar Hospital road, Railway Station turning, Rajshahi-Bogra-Dhaka square, old bus terminal, Chowkirpar. ## Public accountability and statutory audit

By K M Hossain

There is no difference of opinion about considering transparency and public accountability as the supreme goal of democratic form of governance and likewise in ensuring such accountability. It is unfortunate but true that whenever we try to apply this poles apart.

which is recognised by the Constitution implicitly. This particular form of independence as envisaged by the Constitution has been more or less nullified by the Rules of Business of the government when it says that first appointment and administration of the Cadre is the responsibility of the Ministry of Finance which is a part of the executive organ of the government. If the statutory office of the Auditor General has to look up to the Ministry promotion of officers like all considering statutory audit as other cadres in the country, one of the foremost tools of his flexibility and strength is frustrated.

According to the existing practices of the government, apparent consensus into which incidentally is comreality the cause and effect go mon to all ministries, even a well-thought out proposal of Firstly, audit has to be the Auditor General is independent in its true sense examined de novo, starting of the term to be at all from an Assistant Secretary meaningful. The Audit Cadre, up to the Secretary of his

Over the past 10 years or responsibility, is slightly so, almost all the constidifferent from other cadres tutional bodies like the Public Service Commission, the Election Commission and the Parliament Secretariat have been administratively independent through specific decision of the government but unfortunately in the Auditor General's case it is yet to be so.

A number of studies have been made during the past few years. With the curious exception of the Secretaries Committee, strengthening of Audit as an institution and independence of audit in its of Finance for its budget, real sense have been administrative control and recommended in all those studies. It is now for us to take measures to do this. Secondly, let us consider the division of work within the government as a whole. I hope citizens of the country would agree that if a magistrate is asked to do all sorts of odd jobs including requisition of vehicles from the street, he can not concentrate on his assigned duties of magistracy. Similar is the case if a District Commissioner is asked to act as returning officer in the national elections under a statutory body like the Election Commission. It is true that the DCs are temporarily placed under the Election Commission for the job, but for all other practical government purposes, he remains part of the executive organ of the government. Whether the accountability and transparency of the lower judiciary can be ensured while remaining a part of the executive is also a matter for consideration.

Similarly, accountability and transparency of the

statutory audit of the Auditor

General are to some extent meaningless if he has to spend a major portion of his time in administering a huge department of thirteen thousand men, roughly two thirds of whom are supposed to be doing accounting jobs and internal checking on behalf of the executive.

. Thirdly, we should also consider the issue of recruitment of officers for the Auditor General as a specialized discipline. In our country, all Class-I services are recruited through the Public Service Commission according to a straitjacket system and are given the same treatment during various steps of career planning. promotion, hire and fire etc. This to me appears quite unworkable.

Even if the Auditor

General feels that he should have multidisciplinary officers like engineers, doctors, cost accountants, or even if he feels that he should engage some consultants of relevant disciplines, he cannot do so because of existing rules and regulations. Keeping the existing recruitment system as it is and rules intact on the one hand, and expecting him to provide quality job and even becoming independent and transparent in his actions on the other is not compatible with each other.

In this backdrop, if we look at some of the advanced countries we find that the Auditor General is fully independent to hire his own officials and also to fire them when he feets that they are not up to his desired standard. This paradoxical situation is not unique for the Auditor General. It is faced by all departments in the administration. The concept of job security needs to be reexamined in the context of the performance of the officers in their designated assignments because it breeds complacency in them. In the Auditor General's case I consider this to be very crucial. This may sound radical but in the long run it may disprove the joke prevalent in our country which says, "it is difficult to get a job but all the more difficult to lose it."

compliance of audit issues by the other branches of the government. In the recent past, at least in three cases the Public Accounts Committee and the Public Undertakings Committee have recommended some effective measures against misuse of public money and resources, but as a long prevailing tradition, the Auditor General will not be surprised to see that in practice no tangible steps have been taken. If even on the recommendation of the PAC no adequate action is taken against the defaulting officials (if necessary by bringing about some changes in other laws of the country through which financial losses could be recovered), then the very effectiveness of the Parliament as the most powerful organ of the government will remain merely a seminar

Japan receives Aussie rice

TOKYO, Aug 26: Nearly two years after Japan agreed to give up its ban on foreign rice, the first rice imported under the new trading rules arrived Thursday, reports AP.

The shipment of Australian rice means a new headache for government food officials. Because the rice harvest is expected to meet needs this year, imports will probably only add to an unneeded surplus.

For decades Japan banned all foreign rice, saving it wanted to be self-sufficient in its staple grain. But the ban became a symbol of closed markets, and Tokyo agreed in December 1993 to allow limited imports as part of a world free trade agreement

Japan must import at least 4 per cent of its projected total consumption for the fiscal year ending next March 31, with the figure rising to 8 per cent by the end of the decade

This year's imports will amount to around 420 000 tons, said Yoshiro Takahashi of Beikoku Databank, a rice industry think tank
