HAT sportsmen are very tolerant. Well, up L to a level, that is. An example may suffice. In the late 1940s, one of cricket's outstanding left-handed batsmen, New Zealander Martin Donnelly advised his Oxford classmates thus: "And a word about catching. If you miss one, don't worry Concentrate on catching the next. And if you miss that don't worry. Could happen to anyone. Concentrate on catching the next. And if you miss that, don't worry. You won't be playing for us anymore.

This is when I remembered a totally different game called SAF football. If we didn't get the gold, don't worry. Concentrate on the silver. If we didn't get the silver, don't worry. It could happen to anyone. Concentrate on getting the bronze. If we don't get the bronze. don't worry. There is nothing else to win.
