Boulmerka and Shouaa send message to Arab women

Phil Minshull writes from London

The gold medals won by Algeria's Hassiba Boulmerka and Syria's Ghada Shouaa at the recent World Athletics Championships in Gothenburg was an unprecedented feat for Arab women. But their victories are likely to have an impact far beyond the athletics track. Gemini News Service looks at two contrasting women with one message.

ALGERIA'S Hassiba Boulmerka and Syria's Ghada Shouaa athlete to come from these countries — regardless of their standard. While Boulmerka's success would certainly have inspired some women from those places, the problems she has had to overcome might well discourage others. In Algeria she has been subjected to threats from Islamic fundamentalists and as a young girl she was frequently spat on and pelted with stones while at training. After her gold medal triumph at the 1991 World Championships — the first achieved by an Arab or African woman athlete — the Algerian imam pronounced a kofr, a denunciation, of Boulmerka, for "running with naked legs in front of thou-

Hassiba Boulmerka: A particularly important victory for Algeria

By contrast, Shouaa has literally come down from the hills around her home in Moharda, 200 kilometres from the capital Damascus. She is a Coptic Christian who, despite victories in the heptathlon at the last two Asian Games, was a virtual novice on the global stage until her surprising victory in Sweden. As the gold medals were hung around their necks, both athletes had a single message for Arab women. "This is a particularly important victory for Algeria. There are not so many women in Islamic sport," said Boulmerka. "I endorse her sentiments," said Shouaa. "I hope my win will encourage Arab girls to take up sport."

The question of Arab women participating in athletics is a thorny one in many countries across the Maghreb (the Arabic countries of north-west Africa) where the rise of Islamic fundamentalism and a host of other cultural problems has put formidable obstacles in the way of would-be runners. Morocco's Nawal El Moutawakil managed to hurdle those obstacles and more. At the 1984 Olympics, she won the 400 metre hurdles to open the door to athletics for Arab women. But because of Morocco's position on the periphery of the Arab world, her victory had only a minimal impact at the time. El-Moutawakil, a tireless campaigner for women's athletics, particularly in the Middle East, was elected to the International Amateur Athletic Federation Council in Gothenburg and so the issue of Arab women's development is now firmly back on the sporting agenda. But there is a lot of ground to be made up in the countries of Africa and Asia. It was noticeable that no female athletes from Iran, Iraq, Qatar and Saudi Arabia competed in Gothenburg, although the IAAF would have paid for at least one woman

Primo hopes for the best

PARIS, Oct 14: World athletics chief Primo Nebiolo said on Thursday that the 1996 Grand Prix would turn global with new meetings being staged in Tokyo and Moscow, reports Reuter.

"We have sought to make the IAAF Grand Prix more international," said Nebiolo, the president of the International Amateur Athletics Federation during the IAAF's calendar congress on Thursday. Nebiolo added that the second category meetings — dubbed Grand Prix II meetings — would also be held in Melbourne, Johannesburg and New Delhi in February and April. "In the past, we had two meetings in the US and one in Brazil. All the other Grand Prix meetings took place in Europe," he said. "Now we're going to show that all continents are able to stage Grand Prix events," Nebiolo said.

Meetings outside the Grand Prix will also take place in Jakarta, Cape Town, Vancouver and St Petersburg, he added. "Overall there will be 40 first class meetings next season compared to 34 last year," Nebiolo said. For the Grand Prix final in Milan, 3.4 million dollars will be on offer for top athletes, compared to 2.3 million dollars last year. Both Grand Prix winners will collect 250,000 dollars. Athletes who break a world record will receive 100,000 dollars and 50,000 dollars will be awarded for each event. "I wish I were Michael Johnson," Nebiolo said.
