Highlights

Dark Justice

Murder-mystery author Mason Straub (PAUL BENVICTOR) is accused of killing a prostitute. He hires his friend, private investigator Kelly Cochran (Janet Gunn), to find the real killer. She enlists the help of Judge Nicholas "Nick" Marshall (Bruce Abbott), Arnold "Moon" Willis (Dick O'Neill) and Jericho "Gibs" Gibson (Clayton Prince). One of the few clues they have is that the killer dressed as a nun.

Kelly starts her investigation by checking Straub's apartment. While looking through his computer for information, Kelly is attacked by the crazed nun. The nun ties Kelly up, smashes the computer and sets the room on fire. Kelly is saved by Straub's dim-witted neighbor, Fyllis Goodspeed (Debi A. Monahan). A few days later, Fyllis is found dead.

The hard drive from Straub's broken computer contains the only copy of his newest book. Moon tries to fix it for Straub, but it is stolen by the same vicious nun, who knocks Moon unconscious during the robbery.

Kelly visits Straub's publisher, Abigail Fulbright (Elizabeth Dennehy). Abigail is a stern woman who seems overly concerned with Straub's personal life. Kelly finds several clues in Abigail's apartment that seem to indicate that she is the murderer.

Abigail is arrested and Kelly joins Straub to celebrate the closing of the case. During Kelly's visit she finds the missing computer hard drive in Straub's cupboard. He reveals that he dressed as a nun and killed the women, to get more publicity for his books. Before Straub can kill Kelly, she is saved by Nick, who has deduced on his own that Straub is the real killer.

Straub goes to jail and Abigail starts writing her own mystery novels.
