Birla Heart Centre
completes 5000
surgeries

BM Birla Heart Research Centre has completed five thousand major heart surgeries in a record time of six years since its inception, a feat performed by very few heart hospitals in the world, says a press release.

Approximately three thousand heart surgeries were done to bypass the blocked coronary arteries of the heart. About one thousand two hundred operations were done on children age less than twelve years. About two hundred operations were done on children who were only a two months old. Rest of the operations were done to repair of replace heart valves.

This is one of the very few hospitals in the world to have expertise to operate on new born babies to elderly patients. In the process of reaching the magical figure of five thousand major heart surgeries, the institute opened several new chapters in the history of heart surgery.

Six years ago an open heart surgery was performed on a new born baby. This feat made BM Birla Heart Centre, the first hospital in India to venture into neonatal open heart surgery. Asia's first dynamic cardiomyoplasty operation in which the chest wall muscle is used to augment the heart function was performed at this institute. The blood vessel of the stomach was used to bypass the blocked arteries of the heart for the first time here in the country. The artificial heart was used for the first time in the country successfully at this institute. Key-hole operation to close an abnormal communication between the two major blood vessels of the heart (Patent Ductus Arteriosus) was performed with the help of the microchip camera for the second time in the world at this institute. For the first time in the world an open heart surgery to close a hole in the heart with a help of a microchip camera was performed at this institute. For the first time in the country, an artificial lung (Veno Venous ECMO) was used here to treat respiratory failure.

Due to the increasing demand for more critical care beds and more operations, the institute is planning for a large expansion programme adding thirteen more critical care beds to help increase the number of angiograms and heart operations.

Twenty-five per cent of the operations in this hospital are done on patients coming from lower socio economic strata where the management offers treatment at a concessional rate and all the doctors and the technical staff offer their service entirely free.
