A decade at Old Trafford

England, Nov 5 (Reuter) : Manchester United manager Alex Ferguson must be won dering whether his 10th aumversary at the club is an occasion for laughter or tears. Three weeks ago his side were one win away from a place in the quarterfinals of the European Cup and two points away from the top of the English Premier league.

Memories of their 4-0 victory over title-rivals Newcastle in the Charity Shield in August were still fresh and the defending English champions had just beaten arch-rivals Liverpool.

But since mid-October, the 53-year-old Glasgogian has seen his side humiliated at Newcastle and Southampton. beaten at home in the league for the first time since 1994 and robbed of a much-cherished record by Fenerbahce in the Champions' League.

Prior to last Wednesday's 1-0 reverse against the Turkish champions. United had played 56 consecutive European matches in Manchester without defeat. Records like that do not go quietly, and a sense of unease hangs over Old Trafford.

"It's an ironic life," he reflected morbidly after the Fenerbahce match. "You prepare to celebrate 10 years at a club and instead find yourself suffering the first home defeat in Europe. I had hoped it wouldn't happen during my time here."

Happen it has, but if Ferguson needs cheering up on his anniversary, if he needs reminding how far United have come in his term of office, a glance back to 1986, when he took the most demanding job in British club football, should do the trick. In November that year, the once-mighty United sat 19th in the old 22-side First Division and had just been dumped out of the League Cup - ironically enough by Southampton.

The Reds' 1968 European Cup triumph seemed more myth than reality with each passing season and they had not lifted the English league trophy for 19 had to change. Ferguson, a strict disciplinarian during his management days at Aberdeen and a master of psychological war-fare, had noticed some of his players walking off the Oxford pitch at halftime. He reminded them they were representing one of the world's great club sides. From that moment on. United players ran rather than ambled to the dressing rooms at the interval.

"It is the point of their job to reach a certain standard of fitness and keep it," he asserted. "They know I'm right. They know you can't achieve anything by being lax in your life."

But for a long time the Ferguson revolution failed to gain momentum.

From November 1986, when he took over, to May 1990, when United lifted the F A Cup. Ferguson failed to bring a single piece of silverware to Old Traf-

The club's patience was to be well rewarded. The 1990 FA Cup led to the Cup Winners' Cup the following season. United beat Barcelona in the final to claim their first continental trophy since their solitary European Cup in 1968. Next up was the league cup in 1992 and, finally in 1993, the one the Stretford End fans had vearned for - the English league championship. United's final home game of the season against Blackburn was a carnival. Ferguson, by nature a terse, short-tempered man, smiled in the May evening sunshine as United's ecstatic fans turned Old Trafford into a sea of red and white celebration. In 1994 United won the league and cup double and, after a frustrating 1995 in which Ferguson's men relinquished their league title on the final day of the season and their FA Cup title in the final, they reclaimed both trophies in 1996.

Ferguson, a Scot to the core of his soul, a former Glasgow Rangers player and Scotland manager, had become the first coach in history to win the English domestic double twice.

It has been an astonishing 10 yeas for "fergie", who has won admiration for the way he has offered paternal protection to young talents such as Ryan Giggs and for gently guiding his wayward captain Eric Cantona back to the straight and narrow.

The man born within sight of the giant shipyard cranes on the river Clyde has remained faithful to his working-class origins. His politics are as red as United's famous shirts.

It will be while before Ferguson qualifies for the legend status accorded to the late Sir Matt Busby, architect of postwar United and the club's manager for 24 years from 1945.

But despite the 5-0 rout at Newcastle last month, despite the historic home loss against Fenerbache, Ferguson is still king of Old Trafford.

Seaman pride of England

LONDON, Nov 5: Goalkeeper David Seaman, who helped England to the semifinals of Euro '96, was named the country's player-of-the-year Tuesday in a vote by a panel of soccer writers, reports AP.

The 33-year-old Arsenal player edged out striker Alan Shearer and captain Tony Adams for the award.

Seaman made a penalty save from Scotland's Gary McAllister which helped set up Eng-land's vital 2-0 victory over Scotland in the Euro '96 championships.

He also made another crucial save in the shootout with Spain, stopping Miguel Nadal to put England through to the semifinals against Germany.

earns a recall

AMSTERDAM, Nov 5: Ajax Amsterdam winger Marc Overmars has been recalled by the Netherlands for Saturday's World Cup Group Seven qualifier against Wales in Eindhoven, reports Reuter.

Overmars last played for the Dutch in December 1995 in the 2-0 win over Ireland that booked a place at Euro '96. But he had a knee operation shortly after that match and missed the. finals.

Coach Guus Hiddink was forced to make three changes from the squad that won 3-1 in Wales last month, with Ajax's versatile Winston Bogarde, PSV Eindhoven's Stan Valckx and -Manchester United's Jordi Cruyff all unfit.

Serie A club declare news blackout

PERUGIA, Italy, Nov. 5: Serie A newcomers Perugia muzzled their players on Sunday after rumblings of mutiny following their Italian Cup defeat by a part-time side, reports Reuter.

A statement from the struggling club said the news blackout had been decided following continual controversial statements which have appeared in certain newspapers"

It said only owner Luciano Gaucci was authorised to talk to the media and that it hoped the blackout would restore peace.

Perugia, promoted to the First Division last season but lying fourth from bottom with just 'hree points from four matches, crashed out of the second round of the cup last Wednesday 2-1 at home to Serie C Nocerina

The defeat denied Perugia a lucrative tie against European Cup holders Juventus and carned manager Giovanni Gacone a warning from Gaucci that he would be sacked if his record did not improve.
