Computer Countdown to Zero hour 'Catastrophe'

Arlene Getz apgetz@aol.com. Boston, USA:

New Year's Eve revellers will not be alone when they wake up with hangovers on the first day of the year 2000. Computer experts also face a major headache.

The problem is that much of the world's computer software has not been programmed to advance into a new century and will turn their clocks back to 1900.

It may sound trivial, but it is a problem which could throw business, government and banking into chaos.

"The year 2000 date change poses one of the most significant challenges ever faced by the IT (information technology) industry." Kevin Schick. research director of the Connecticut-based Gartner Group providing IT advisory services. told a US congressional subcommittee.

"(It) will have enormous impact on business applications, package solutions and system software, even putting some companies at risk in their business. The bottom line is that the year 2000 'virus' is the most devastating ever to infect the world's business and IT sys-

In fact, the problem is less a computer virus than the arrival of a day that pioneering programmers thought may never come. It arises from the fact that the makers of early software tried to save valuable storage space by allocating two digits instead of four to record a specific year. Thus 1996 is stored in data files as 96 and 2000 will appear in millions of data files as 00.

Time-sensitive computers will not like to be told they have been returned to a pre-electronic era. In a fit of technological apoplexy, they may respond either by shutting down or by distorting calculations because they believe 00 is an earlier date than 99.

"A financial spreadsheet or projection, therefore, might show the financial trend for the 1999-2000 period running backwards rather than forwards," explains New York computer law expert Jeff Jin-

Insurance company computers might believe that a policy due to expire in 2001 had run out in 1901. "A non-complaint bank computer calculating interest for a financial instrument for the period of 1995 through the year 2000 might instead calculate the interest for the period of 1900 through 1995 - for a 96-year period instead of a six-year period," says Jinnett.

The consequences of such incorrect calculations are enormous.

Automatic banking machines could reject credit cards they deem to have expired 100 years earlier. Governments which keep computer-based records to determine information such as a citizen's age may find their software claiming that a 60-year-old is really minus 40, and therefore not eligible for pension or social security payments.

There are also those who believe the problem has been ex aggerated by technology firms hoping to generate business.

Software management consultant Nicholas Zvegintzov for example, calls the predictions "a huge and unique racket." In an article in the journal American Programmer he writes: "The problem is free, but solutions are for sale."

Whatever the hype, it is clear that computer systems around the world will experience some sort of disruption over the next few years. For some, such as those using forecasting software, the problem has already

In other cases, the Wall Street Journal has reported that at least one large insurer has had to stop writing fouryear policies and may have to stop selling three-year policies next year if it cannot correct its software.

While many of the problems can and will be corrected, doing so will be an expensive and time-consuming endeavour. Rather than simply changing the date on a computer, billions of lines of computer programming will have to be changed.

One firm, the Prudential Insurance Company of America. is reportedly budgeting $ 150 million to correct 125 million lines of code. The Gartner Group estimates the final cost to businesses worldwide will be between $300 billion and $600 billion by 1999 - and even then, 30 per cent of computer applications will not be ready

This, in turn, could generate major legal problems in determining who should be held liable when companies or clients suffer losses because of the date change. "This is not a problem for 2000," says Gartner Group vicepresident Darlene Brown. "This a problem for today."

OPINIONS: BNP's Parliament boycott

Rahman rahmans@mem.po.com NY. USA:

I support 100% the boycott of the parliament by the BNP. so far BAJADOL (BNP) has failed miserably to offer any constructive role in the parliament. They have shown that although most of us are illeterate, constitution and discussion on its basis requires some educational background, surely above the level of HSC. What they should do now is watch the videos of their role in the parliament and decide if at all they should return to the parliament with their present state of knowledge. Since they want to establish bismillah as their motto and monopolise allah as their sole property they would be better off implementing the meaning of ICRA. Otherwise, the country will have to pay high price.

Mashiur Rahman tex5mar@ac.leeds.uk

Leeds, UK: Although the roll of BNP in parliament is not very good as they walkd out frequently but they do not have any other poinion. Contradiction of rulling party between what they are doing and what they are saying. Why Hasina is not controlling her student wing from "Hall Dhakhal" in almost all the universities in Bangladesh. If her party workers have right to keep arms all other parties have the same right. Why not Govt. atornay opposes the getting autocrat Ershad bail? M. A. Kabir cskabirm@swansea.ac.uk Cardiff. UK:

BNP's present boycot of Jatio Sangsad is expressing its undemogratic attitude. We are really amazed why BNP could absence from an important session when the much hatred Imdemnity bill was passed. Is BNP a defender of the killers? In fact, absence of BNP's from that historical session of JS has damages image of the party. Everybody demands the trial of the killers of Sk. Mujib -- all of them are not obviously Awami Leaguers. But what about BNP? Don't it want the trial of the killers. The policy makers of BNP should think about this.

Moazzam Hossain hossain-m@hp.rmc.ca

Toronto, Canada: When I hear the frequently

"no democracy as long as the present Government (AL-government) is in power", I wonder what role they can play in the establishment, called parliament, which is the legitimate outcome of that election. BNP, while was in Government, did not center their activities in the parliament. Most of the supossedly required parliamentary decision they took outside of it. The leader of the BNP (at that timw leader of the government) tried to avoid the parliamentary session. So the question arises whether they will at all participate in the parliamentary session. The role they can play is hard to de-

The parliament, is the hub of the politics, in the parliamentary democracy. Every thing is brought to there. The government explain their plan the other parties, in opposition, criticize the shortcoming. But both of them are exposed to the public scrutiny as most of the question answer period is telecasted (it is done in Canada) Here again, Government is brought to accountable to the nation though the effective activities of the opposition members of the parliament. Sometimes a national consensus is developed through the activities and even the party in power has to tune their activities to suit those. The peoples of Bangladesh gave BNP sufficient number of MPs to play an effective role in the parliamentary democracy. I thing they should be thankful to the people for sending them once in Government and second time for a strong opposition party. My understanding is that People did not like their ineptness but pople could not also trust AL totally because of 21 years misleading propaganda against AL. Because of that, they have been given chance to play the role of opposition party.

The BNP leadership should understand the new reality. They started their hateful propaganda against AL exploiting the cantonment. The following autocratic government kept those till the people power put those end. Father of the nation was branded as the enemy of the nation. People has torn that. People wants now calm terror free society, terror free education institute and prosperity. The words should match the deeds. BNP should be also accountable for their present and past deeds.

I wish they will understand the present trend of the people's perception. I hope the leader of the opposition will return people residence back to them. I hope her kins should put under trial for financial corruption to clear of his bad name if he is honest. The former prime minister of Canada (Brian Malreneyl came forward as their was rumor of kick back Prophet (pbuh) did not even advise a young boy to quit swee eating till he himself gave up.

I hope the leader of the BNP will start participating the parliamentary session and make it the center of all politics. That's the rule of the parliamentary democracy, that's why they were elected for and they are being paid for these. If they do not, people will choose some other to look into their inter

Md. Habibur Rahman Md.Habibur.Rahman@student kuleuven.ac.be Brussels, Belgium:

The role of BNP in the Jatio Sangsad is really hopeless. The people of Bangladesh voted for BNP for the last 5 years term. There was no change which is remarkabe for the development of the country. Moreover, her son, brother, relatives, some PMs became owner of many industries. There was no freedom of Radio, TV etc. No solution of Ganges's water. Only what they did to create an anti Indian centiment. But, the time has changed. BNP should should look to its own face. It should participate in the debate in the JS. The boycott of the JS by the BNP and other is really looks very funny. Exactly there is no reason. In one sense, they are shouting for nothing. They should be more serious to the discussion in the parliament.

Use of objectionable word shoold be prohibited. It degrade a nation's character. They should try their best to go for real issues, like, Ganges's water problem. Separation of Judiciary from administration. trials for criminal and corrupted political leaders who robbed people's money while

Shakawat Ali sqa5743@is3.nyu.edu New York, USA:

It seems to me that the BNF do not have any role in the parliament as opposition. Their intention is to oppose anything because they are opposition. We have been observing that they are either absent from parliament or act shamefully when present. In fact, they have joined the parliament through walkout. It is very shame that our opposition was absent during the nulification of ashamed "Indemnity ordinance". Many so called freedom lighters are members of BNP. They should be shamed. It clearly indicates their involvement in al killings.

Also, their demand to stop TV viewing of parliament sessions indicate their obsession to make parliament a war zone of body language and name callings. After all, we call them VIP and we elect them. What a shame! I would urge them to read about the role of developed country or even India, Korea or other country's opposition role, if they want to develop the country.

M.Shakil Ahmed shakil@macnica.co.jp Tokyo. Japan:

The political news from Bangladesh always makes me sad but yet I think those are what we are. There was a big and risky(!) change in politics in last June election and whatever the change was I anticipated that atleast the country will be quiet for at least 2 years. But very recently i am having doubt about that when i see BNP movements, they even boycotted the parliament protest ing various aspects of the present government. Seems like without BNP the coutry is going to melt... Why not giving them a little more time. It is always painful to be ousted from the power specially in the poorest country where the people in power can enjoy only! But BNP's ass is biting too early! I wonder why the people are excepting this.. The world is not meant to be like before. I can't say AL is going to bring us sweets, basically the political parties are same dirty. The sorrow is when the nation will get a real politician who's goal will be development only and going forward and will not make Jabor like a cow. Development could be so easy for little Bangladesh with a huge population!

Hired Help

Zaed Mohaiemen Zaed.Mohaiemen@oberlin.edu Cleveland, OHIO, USA:

This a issue that not many people in Bangladesh stop to think for a minute, but it is something that is so deep rooted, that we don't look into this issue. It is the plight of "Hired Help" as it is described in this country. I telt extremely ashamed to confess to the RC (Resident Coordinator) of my dormitory, that "yes, we do have several maids working in our house." I mean it is not easy fact to come to grips with that we are actually exploiting these people only becasue they are from a lower economic background than us (a lot like developed countries lik the US exploits cheap labour from a Thrid World country like Bangladesh). The more I think about this issue of having hired help it seems to frustrating. can't think of a single reason that would actually legitimize this exploitative paractice in our country. I give my RC some really weak explanation of the reason that we have hired help. and it is the done practice in Bangladesh, and "it actually helps them!". I was reading the latest issue of "Unmad", which is this crazy humor magazine that copied its idea from the American magazine "Mad": there is an article by Anisul Hoque in the november issue of Unmad.

He is basically describing some of the ways that rickshaw puller in Bangladesh try to fleece you out of that one extra taka, but the issue is the kind of physical labor envolved in the work they do and the amount of payment they receive for their work is only comparable to slave labor! Still, we fight with the rickshaw pullers about one taka (hell! I've done that a thousand times). The issue is that as long as we can not stop a ininority of the population in our country from opressing the majority, we can never free ourselves from the shakles of slavery that western imperialistic countries tries to impose on Bangladesh (mainly through MTV. Coca-Cola, Roxette!). I am so glad atleast there isn't a 'McDonalds' in Bangladesh, I much prefer the distinctly Bangladeshi tasting burgers that one can get in Bangladesh than the generic tasteless "Big Macs" and "Whoppers" (Burger King) that this country pro-

Bangladeshi Students in UK

Syed Mujibur Rahim cop96smr@sheffield.ac.uk Sheffield, UK:

In the recent years it is noted that the number of overseas students in the UK educational institutions are in decline. This trend is very much true in regard to Bangladeshi students. The factors contributing to the trend are as follows:

(a)No Scholarships or financial assistance are available for the Bangladeshi undergraduate suudents.

(b) Tution fees and maintainance costs are high. (c)Number of Commonwealth Scholarships for the postgradutes are reduced each year. (d)Studentships are imporsiable to obtain.

le)Students can not undertake any part or full time work. (f)Imporsible to obtain resi dence status or work after completing your studies unless if you are a medical doctor.So. make up your own conclusions regarding pursuing a course of study in the UK.

KANSAS CITY. USA:

I am a Bangladeshi female student studying in the United States of America. I study at the Wichita State Univ. in Kansas. I am really happy to see other Bangladeshi students who are enrolled with me. These days the number of Bengali Female students have increased here in America. I must mention that about 95% of our students are scoring high in class compared to other nationalities. There is a Bangladeshi student Association formed by us where we help new students arriving to the States for the first time. We also do various cultural nights where we sing, recite poems, dance and act to expose our culture to our fellow AMERICAN STUDENTS.I trully encourage more female students to come to America since we are doing so well here. If any one is interested to know more about the Wichita State Univ. please send me an E_MAIL to this address: LOPA@DTC.NET.
