There are some lanes near

The "waste economy" has some ominous aspects. The itinerant waste particularly in such fields as used plastic containers, used bottles of wellknown brands of consumer items like shampoos, perfumes, talcum, powder, after-shave lotion, etc. are reported to be widely used in making spurious and adulterated products. For such activities, it is said that a wide range of so-called "industries" operate clandestinely using ingenuous techniques, and their products are marketed in outlying areas in mofusils and villages to simple unsuspecting consumers. Observers feel that it is not easy to control the ongoing racket.

In many developed countries, the work of solid waste management is done through sophisticated technology of recycling for productive purposes. While such innovative technology is unthinkable in our present situation, the problem continues to grow on account of increased and uncontrolled urban explosion. In this context, to cope with the increased load of responsibility for waste management, some municipal corporations are reportedly obliged to delegate part of their responsibility to private contractors. So far as this city is concerned, it is open to question whether it has become fruitful in view of the present disarray in the adoption of corrective measures resulting in

A major contributing factor in the accumulation of solid waste in city bazars is the utter indifference and lack of supervision by the supervising staff of the municipal authorities. The sprouting of impromptu kutcha bazars on pavements of some offices and in some commercial areas adds a new dimension to the problem of city sanitation. Although eviction has lately been resorted to tackle the problem, it has been observed that the unauthorised structures for trade causing an environment of waste and filth have a resiliency to revert to their old trading spots. This ultimately makes for an intractable situation in the matter of waste management.

A couple of years ago, Dhaka City Corporation undertook a Japan-aided project on solid waste management to improve the city's garbage disposal sys tem. The results of the project do not seem to be in evidence because of absence of tangible improvement in this behalf.

In this perspective, the present poor waste management system of the city presents a sad contrast to the systems followed in any other big city in nearby regions, not to speak of developed countries.

Practices in City

By AS M Nurunnabi

In Dhaka city, waste man agement through effective and efficient means has remained a serious issue. Waste collection in the city seems to be a mixed enterprise. Dhaka City Corporation employs an army of street cleaners and waste collectors whose job is to keep waste from piling up on the streets.

There is another more extensive class of waste managers comprising a network of itinerant waste buyers, waste pickers small waste shops, secondhand markets, dealers, transporters and a wide range of recycling industries. According to observers, waste is big business with mosquito killing insecticide. The programme, however, proved ineffective mainly due to integration of MEP into general health services and cessation of vector control operations, the sources pointed out.

In view of the deteriorating situation, Bangladesh government and WHO reviewed the malaria control programme in May, 1992. Later, in the same year at Amsterdam, delegates from various countries endorsed the world declaration on malaria and the revised global strategy for its control.

Since its implementation, malaria, especially in the endemic zone, is well under control. According to a recent government assessment of the current malaria control activities the reported cases showed a downward trend. A 25 per cent reduction of malaria deaths by the year 2000 has been targeted WHO has a budget of about Tk 1.10.50.000 for this fiscal year exclusively for control of the vector borne disease. There are four types of malaria parasites, globally recognised. Two of those, Plasmodium Falciparum and Plasmodium Vivax, exist in Bangladesh. Mosquitoes carrying P. Falciparum parasites live mainly in dense hilly forest areas whereas mosquitoes having P. Vivax live in the plains. Both the parasites, transferred through mosquito bites, multiply in the red blood cells causing sickness, the first symptom of the disease, followed by severe diarrhoea, anaemia, vomitting and unconsciousness. "We have three different forms of malaria treatment Uncomplicated, when the patient experiences mild fever, he is given chloroquine tablets for three days. If the victim does not show any sign of improvement, his case is considered as treatment failure malaria. He is then given quinine, fansidar and primaquine tablets. If temperature of the patient continues to rise, the victim is given quinine injection along with fansidar and primaquine tablets," explained Dr Ajay Ghosh, a medical officer at the Ramu Thana Health Complex in Cox's Bazar.

Malaria, once viewed with superstitions, seems to be well in control now in the remote villages. "This has been possible through extensive motivational programmes. "Traditional village quacks, imams and elite of the rural areas are regularly briefed about the modern method of malaria treatment. A villager feeling fever would instantly take a dose of chloroquine tablet before arriving at the thana health complex for further treatment," Dr Ghosh added. There was a time in early seventies when at least one member from every family in the deep forests of the Hill Tracts region died from malaria. Death toll was high when the disease spread in an epidemic form. "Today we have some of the best experts on malaria control in the country. Thanks to the national policy. we are now able to combat this killer disease, once considered uncontrollable," said Dr Supriya Barua, Civil Surgeon of Rangamati.

"Despite substantial success in eradication, incidence of malaria in remote hill areas will continue so long as communication in the area does not improve. There are inaccessible places in Pargaon, Bagaichhari and Langadu in Rangamati and Nachionchhari in Cox's Bazar where the only means of communication is by foot. It takes six to nine hours to reach the nearest health centre. In such places a positive malaria victim would probably die helplessly." Dr Barua, who has 18 years of experience in this field, told The Daily Star.

Patients with malaria flood hospitals during the pre-monsoon (June-July) and post-monsoon (September-October) seasons when mosquitoes start breeding. Medicated mosquito nets distributed in the villages have proved an effective tool to fight mosquitoes, especially before, during and after the monsoon season, sources concerned pointed out.

"To detect positive cases of malaria, blood samples are taken for microscopic examination. This tremendously helps us during our treatment period. We know exactly which drug to apply," said Dr Barua. "Without the examination, it is difficult to determine the nature of the parasitic attack which can cause constriction of blood vessels in the brain and ultimate death within six to eight hours," he added.

ber 9 last year. "Mentally prepared to see that our proposal for proportionate membership in the committees has been incorporated into the report for placing in the House, we got surprised to see that the proposed amendment, which was already accepted by the ruling party, was missing in the minutes of the previous meeting placed before us for approval on November 9," MK Anwar told this correspondent.

The Speaker, following BN-P's dissatisfaction over the incident, directed the officials of the JS Secretariat to "correct the minutes and present those for approval of the committee in the next meeting," Anwar added. Two more meetings were held on February 1 and 26 this year and the Speaker directed the officials concerned once more, but the corrections are yet to be made, he said.

In this regard, a top ranking official of the JS Secretariat observed that it was hard to believe that the JS staff did not correct the proceedings after being dictated by the Speaker to do it. The Speaker was not available for comment.

While attending the last meeting, MK Anwar had adcrossed to Tripura state of India vised the ruling party members to "abandon the hide and sick game" and suggested that the committee report, along with the BNP's proposed amendments be placed in the House for consideration. "The ruling party is free to reject the BNPproposed amendments by the strength of their majority", he told the Speaker.

Until prorogation of the third session of parliament, neither the JS Secretariat corrected the minutes, nor the report was placed in the House. Talking to this correspondent over the issue early this week, the Law Minister admitted that he had said 'yes' to BN-P's amendment seeking distribution of membership of the standing committees proportionately with the parliamentary strengths of the parties and groups. "However, one of my party colleagues in the Standing Committee on JS Rules of Procedure, Rahmat Ali, later objected to the idea", the minister said. Besides, the Jatiya Party member in the committee also requested the Speaker not to accept the BNP-proposed amendment on the ground that it would affect their representations in various important JS standing bodies, JP sources

told this correspondent on Friday night that he had opposed the BNP amendment on technical ground. "A member cannot move an amendment directly to the committee, specially when the sub-committee had finalised its recommendations."

When reminded that MK Anwar had proposed he amendments following a letter of the Speaker that requested the committee members to put forward their amendments, if there was any, Rahmat Ali said: "The request was made to all MPs, and a large number of them have already submitted a number of amendment proposals to the JS Secretariat, which will be discussed in the House later. However, MK Anwar rejected the interpretation. In a separate development, the AL and BNP signed a four point agreement on January 14 last to run the parliament effectively. One of the four points said that Telecommunication Minister Mohammad Nasim would make efforts to resolve the stalemate regarding formation of the committees in consultation with the Chief Whip of Parliament and the Chief Whip of the Opposition in Parliament.

So far, Nasim held two meetings with the Opposition Chief Whip but the meetings failed to produce any result. Sources close to them told The Daily Star that the ruling party rather tagged the question of proportionate distribution of membership with the issue of BNP's political course of action. Meanwhile, the Prime Minister has clearly ruled out any possibility of distributing the committee membership on the basis of the parliamentary strengths of the parties and groups. While making her valedictory statement before prorogation of the last session of Jatiya Sangsad on March 13, the Prime Minister told the House that committees would be formed on the basis of precedence established in the fifth Parliament where Begum Khaleda Zia was the Leader of the House.

The Telecommunication Minister, however, told this correspondent on Wednesday that he would take fresh initiative to resolve the problem soon. But the BNP members believe that it is very difficult for any ruling party leader, however, sincere he might be, to resolve the problem especially after the Prime Minister's "open opposition" to the idea of distributing membership of the committees in proportion to the parliamentary strengths of the parties and groups.
