Tk 882 cr USAID project for mother, child care

By Govinda Shil

The United States Agency for International Development (USAID) will finance a Tk 882 crore health project providing 'one stop' service to improve the health of mothers and children in Bangladesh.

According to a USAID report, the eight-year project focuses on proper immunisation, reduction of high maternal and infant mortality rate and family planning. It will also address the HIV/AIDS problem.

The government along with NGOs will implement the project, starting this month.

Bangladesh has the highest maternal mortality rate in the world — approximately 4.5 per thousand live births. A vast majority of deliveries take place at home without the assistance of medically trained personnel.

The USAID report titled 'National Integrated Population and Health Programme' says Bangladesh has achieved substantial success in lowering fertility rate from over seven births per woman in 1974 to approximately 3.3 in 1996-97. But it is yet to combat child mortality effectively, caused by dehydration, pneumonia and other acute respiratory infections.

The report says only about 25 per cent of children with acute respiratory infections are taken to a healthcare provider. About 75 per cent of pregnant women still do not receive ante natal care. This strongly indicates mothers need access to 'customer service centres' which provide all health needs.

"The maintenance of separate, parallel family planning and health system is extremely expensive," it noted.

USAID Mission Director in Bangladesh Richard M Brown, when contacted, said "customer oriented services prove to be most effective and sustainable."

Decline in birth rate is due to increased contraceptive use, from 3 per cent in 1971 to 49 per cent in 1996-97, revealed the report.

In the late 1980s, infant mortality began to drop from over 100 per thousand to under 82 by 1996-97. Mortality under five decreased by almost 30 per cent during this period to 116 deaths per 1,000 live births.

Women's tennis treated as soft porn!

LONDON, July 1: The British government Sunday attacked coverage of women's tennis at this year's Wimbledon championships as sexist and like soft porn, reports Reuters.

Sports Minister Tony Banks called on journalists and photographers to "concentrate more on women's tennis abilities rather than their underwear and figures."

"It is appalling the way so much of women's tennis is treated like soft porn," he said. His comments came halfway through a Wimbledon fortnight which has seen an even sharper focus than usual in the British press on women tennis players' underwear and bodies.

There have been stories about cellulite afflicting the top women's seeds Monica Seles and Martina Hingis, with close up photography highlighting the alleged problem.

It prompted Hingis to wear longer knickers in her second round match.

One paper, the Daily Mail, has run a two-page spread entirely filled with photographs of women players' underwear.

"We have read nothing so far

Li renews call for reunification HK a blueprint for Taiwan

BEIJING, July 1: Chinese Premier Li Peng called the handover of Hong Kong a great triumph today and urged Taiwan to follow its example and reunify with the motherland, report agencies.

In an address at Beijing's Great Hall of the People to mark the July 1 return of Hong Kong, Li told 4,000 assembled guests that Hong Kong was a blueprint for Taiwan.

"This is an important milestone for the complete reunification of the motherland," he said.

"The one country, two systems principle will work for Hong Kong and Macau and it should also work for Taiwan," he added.

China has pledged to allow Hong Kong to operate along capitalist lines for the next 50 years under the principle of one country, two systems.

Taiwan stressed continued ties with Hong Kong today and again rejected Beijing's desire to reunify with this island under the Hong Kong system.

"At the least, Taiwan and Hong Kong should be able to maintain their current level of relations, and we hope they will be able to improve and grow closer," said Chang King-yu, director general of the Mainland Affairs Council.

Interference by China would hurt the interests of all three, Chang said.

The Chinese and Taiwanese governments are "equal political entities," and long-term separation between the sides cannot be equated with Hong Kong's status as a British colony, Chang said.

The Hong Kong model not only cannot be applied to Taiwan for objective reasons, it also goes against the aspirations of Taiwan's 21.5 million people," he added.

Taipei said today it was banning military and police visits to Hong Kong now that the territory is part of communist China.

Soldiers and police cannot make sightseeing or other pleasure visits to Hong Kong due to security concerns, though exemptions can be made to visit ailing kin or attend funerals, a Defence Ministry spokesman said.

"It's a matter of national security," the spokesman said.

"Since Hong Kong has reverted to mainland sovereignty, we feel it's necessary to apply the same regulations governing mainland visits to Hong Kong," he said.

Meanwhile, starting briskly, Hong Kong launched its new life as part of China today with pageantry and purpose, inaugurating a new leader, a new legislature, even a brand-new symphony of its very own.

China's beaming president immediately vowed to respect the autonomy of the freshly
