3 new ambulances yet to be put into service at Suhrawardy Hospital

By Staff Correspondent

Three new ambulances procured for the Shaheed Suhrawardy Hospital in the city are yet to be put into service despite the increasing demand of the people.

A hospital employee said the vehicles have been idle for about 12-days, waiting for registration and insurance.

At the moment, the Suhrawardy Hospital has only one ambulance and the National Institute for Cardiovascular Diseases has two. The hospital admits about 100 patients a day while the institute handles about 30 daily.

The Director of the Suhrawardy Hospital and the adjoining NICVD, Professor MA Zaman said, there is a great demand for ambulance service in the city.

"We definitely need more ambulances because the number of patients has substantially increased over the years," he said. "But it would be improper to run the ambulances without proper documents".

Prof S R Khan, head of the institute's cardio-vascular surgery department, pointed to a graph showing dramatic rise in the number of admissions with heart problems.

Khan said it takes time to bring institute ambulances on-line because the cardiac units have to be outfitted with special medical equipment like oxygen tanks, defibrillator and heart medication.
