

Biman U-14 soccer Final round from Oct 27

Sports Reporter The final round of the Biman under-14 national football championship will begin at the Cox's Bazar Stadium from October 27.

A total of ten teams including eight qualifiers will be featured in the meet which will be held on knock-out basis.

The eight qualifiers are: Joypurhat, Rangamati, Sherpur, Jessore, Manikganj, Shariyapur, Barisal and Nilphamari.

WC qualifier Kazakstan hold S Korea

ALMATY, Kazakstan, Oct 11: South Korea couldn't capitalise on an early lead as they drew 1-1 with Kazakstan in an Asian Group B World Cup encounter here today, reports AP.

Forward Yong Soo-choi put the Koreans ahead in the third minute.

Kazakstan brought on midfielder Pavel Yevyeyev after halftime. The move paid off, with Yevyeyev grabbing a 53rd minute equaliser.

The Kazak side received three yellow cards during the game, which was watched by about 6,000 spectators in the stadium in central Almaty.

Kazakstan has a sizable ethnic Korean minority. Among the spectators were several hundred Koreans, who loudly cheered on their team with chants, drums and clapping.

Smith to quit WACA office

PERTH, Oct 11: Former England Test batsman Chris Smith announced here Friday he will quit his job as chief executive of Western Australian Cricket Association (WACA) to start a new career in England, reports AFP.

South African-born, Smith, 38, who played in eight Tests while on Hampshire's books, said he would leave Perth in December with his family to work for a British-based sports hospitality business in southern England.

He said he had been offered the job while on holiday in England in June and had been considering it since.

"It was simply too good to refuse," said Smith, who had held Western Australian cricket's top job for five of the six years he had lived here.

Another South African, former star batsman Barry Richards, who lives in Perth, said he was interested in the vacancy created by Smith.

As well as playing four Tests for South Africa, Richards had an outstanding career with Natal, Gloucestershire, Hampshire and South Australia.

The association plans to appoint Smith's successor by the end of the year.

China may bid for 2008 Games

BEIJING, Oct 11: Reversing his remark reported a day ago, the Chinese sports minister said Saturday that Beijing was seriously considered bidding again for the Olympics, reports AP.

"We are in the middle of deliberations, but there's still no conclusion," the state-run Xinhua news agency quoted Wu Shaou as saying.

On Friday, Xinhua reported that Wu had said, "We have not seriously pondered upon that issue."

Beijing's last Olympic bid, for the 2000 Summer Games, was narrowly defeated by Sydney.

Xinhua again quoted Wu as repeating that they have "yet to seriously ponder" another bid. But he also said, "We will make the final decision whether or not to launch another bidding campaign after the National Games," opening Sunday in Shanghai.

Hurt by a controversy over human rights abuses, China lost the 1993 balloting for the 2000 Games by two votes.

Last month, the Japanese newspaper Asahi reported that China was planning to bid for the 2008 Games.

Sr Div league starts today

Sports Reporter Defending Premier Division champions Mohammedan Sporting Club will take on promoters Rahmatganj Muslim Friends Society in the second match on the opening day of the Senior Division football league which kicks off at the Mirpur Stadium this afternoon.

East End Club, one of the two sides relegated to the First Division last year, will meet Dhaka Wanderers Club in the opener. With the sport losing its popularity day by day, the league will be held without any sponsor this time.

A total of 20 teams, ten in the Premier and ten in the First Division, are participating in the league which will initially be played on double league basis. After the first phase, top five teams from each league will vie for the championship through a super league while the remaining 10 teams will play in the relegation league.

Two matches will be held everyday pitting one from each division. The first match will start at 2:30 pm followed by the second at 4:30 pm. Spectators will have to pay Tk 20 each for a gallery ticket (for two matches) while the amount is Tk 40 for a VIP pass.

Following are the participating teams: Premier Division: Mohammedan SC, Abahani KC, Muktiyoddha Sangsad KC, Brothers Union, YMC Fakirerpool, Farashganj SC, Agrani Bank SC, Arambagh KS, Victoria SC and Rahmatganj MFS.

First Division: East End Club, Bangladesh Boys Club, Badda Jagarani Sangsad, Mirpur Chalantika SC, BRTC SC, Dhanmondi Club, Police AC, Wari Club, Shantinagar Club and Dhaka Wanderers Club.

1ST WEEK FIXTURE Oct 12: East End Club vs Dhaka Wanderers Club (2:30 pm) Mohammedan SC vs Rahmatganj SC (4:30 pm) Oct 13: Bangladesh Boys Club vs Shantinagar Club (2:30 pm) Abahani KC vs Victoria SC (4:30 pm) Oct 14: Badda Jagarani vs Wari Club (2:30 pm) Muktiyoddha Sangsad KC vs Arambagh KS (4:30 pm) Oct 15: Mirpur Chalantika vs Police AC (2:30 pm) Brothers Union vs Agrani Bank (4:30 pm) Oct 16: BRTC SC vs Dhanmondi Club (2:30 pm) YMC Fakirerpool vs Farashganj SC (4:30 pm) Oct 17: East End Club vs Shantinagar Club (2:30 pm) Mohammedan SC vs Victoria SC (4:30 pm) Oct 18: Bangladesh Boys Club vs Police AC (2:30 pm) Abahani KC vs Agrani Bank (4:30 pm).

French booter fails drug test

PARIS, Oct 11: Le Havre striker Cyrille Pouget has tested positive for the anabolic steroid nandrolone, his French First Division club said on Friday, reports Reuters.

Pouget, who has three France caps, is free to play until the national football league disciplinary committee meets to deal with his case after the B sample of his urine has also been tested.

Scene from the opening ceremony of the 19th South East Asian Games in the Indonesian capital Jakarta yesterday. — AP/UNB photo

Organisers meet Filipino demand Jakarta gala under way

JAKARTA, Oct 11: Last-minute schedule changes to track and field events prevented a possible pull-out by the Philippines athletic team as the 19th South East Asian Games kicked off in the Indonesian capital today, report agencies.

President Soeharto opened the Games as athletes prepared to hunt for gold amid the rubble of rickety venues and an economy too unstable to help fix them.

The Games were under attack from within even before Soeharto's brief opening, with a local official criticising the "disingenuous" venues and questioning the need for 34 sports in the 10-day, 10-nation event.

The 110,000 seat main stadium, nearly full on opening night, was built in 1962 by the Soviet Union during former President Soekarno's reign. It has not aged gracefully, with rickety wooden seats and dingy passageways below. Some 6,000 schoolchildren dressed in traditional costumes of the 27 Indonesian provinces added colour to the drab stadium while military skydivers, their parachutes resembling national flags, safely made the infield.

The honour of lighting the flame was given to Indonesian Ferry Sonneville, 66, a former world champion badminton player who was chairman of the sport's international federation from 1972-75.

Philippine athletics officials were upset that one of their top medal hopes, veteran long jumper and sprint specialist Elma Muros, 30, would be forced to compete in several of her strongest events on the same day in the space of about an hour.

"The technical delegates met last night and decided to change the date of the women's long jump event, the changes give an advantage to the Philippines team," said Sumartoyo Mar-tothardjo, chairman of the organising committee for the athletics association.

Muros, who holds the SEA Games record in the long jump, took gold in that event and in the 100 metres sprint and hurdles events in the last SEA Games in Chiang Mai, Thailand, in 1995.

The Philippines Star newspaper reported today that the Philippine Amateur Track and Field Association had threatened to pull out its entire track and field team due to the scheduling.

It quoted the association president Go Teng Kok as saying he gave the go-ahead for Muros's husband and coach, George (Jojo) Posadas, to lodge a protest with the organising committee.

"I have asked Jojo to make this appeal to the organisers and if they don't agree I gave him the authority to withdraw the participation of the team," Go was quoted as saying on Friday before the meeting.

Go could not be reached for comment today. Sumartoyo said he wasn't aware that a complaint had been lodged by the Philippines.

Philippine Sport Commission chairman Philip Juico told the news agency today Muros was expected to win three gold medals for the team in her events.

Other last minute glitches were still being worked out as workers rushed to finish venues before the SEA Games officially began later in the day.

The Jakarta Post said Jakarta governor Sutiyoso was upset on Friday to discover that several venues were dirty or incomplete on the eve of the opening.

Mini WC cricket on the cards

CALCUTTA, Oct 11: A mini cricket World Cup among the nine Test playing nations is planned for next year to raise money to popularise the game, the International Cricket Council chief said Saturday, reports AP.

The regular World Cup is scheduled for 1999, in which nine Test playing nations and three associate member countries will take part.

The plan to hold the mini World Cup was taken by a six-member committee, ICC chairman Jagmohan Dalmiya told reporters. The recommendations will have to be formally ratified by the council's executive board in December, he said.

The format for the championship is still being discussed. The council may rank nations and after an elimination round between the eighth and ninth-ranked countries, the others may play the quarterfinals.

The committee has recommended that the tournament be held in one country and completed in 15 days, he said.

At the other end of the 22 yards stood a 22-year-old local club playing his first Test match primarily as an opening bowler in the absence of the mighty Wasim Akram. Azhar Mahmood was not actually a rabbit; only the other day he batted brilliantly against India at Lahore and also bowled extremely well picking up three vital wickets in Pakistan's victory in the one-day series. That was his passport to the Test. Azhar Mahmood happened to be the 64th cricketer to have scored a century on debut in a Test.

Along with Ali Naqvi who scored his debut on the previous day, he had created a crick-eting history which was by now known to all cricket buffs around the world.

In the recent generous over-doses of ODIs between India and Sri Lanka and then between Pakistan and India in which the 'Cold' Sahara Cup also featured, we had almost forgotten the form and image of classical cricket. We had more been busy with the end result, not with the means. The sheer force and unorthodox nature of the strokes of the instant cricket had its strong points no doubt but had robbed the game of its grace and aesthetics. As such a Test match once in a while is a welcome sight.

After the recent generous over-doses of ODIs between India and Sri Lanka and then between Pakistan and India in which the 'Cold' Sahara Cup also featured, we had almost forgotten the form and image of classical cricket. We had more been busy with the end result, not with the means. The sheer force and unorthodox nature of the strokes of the instant cricket had its strong points no doubt but had robbed the game of its grace and aesthetics. As such a Test match once in a while is a welcome sight.

After the recent generous over-doses of ODIs between India and Sri Lanka and then between Pakistan and India in which the 'Cold' Sahara Cup also featured, we had almost forgotten the form and image of classical cricket. We had more been busy with the end result, not with the means. The sheer force and unorthodox nature of the strokes of the instant cricket had its strong points no doubt but had robbed the game of its grace and aesthetics. As such a Test match once in a while is a welcome sight.

After the recent generous over-doses of ODIs between India and Sri Lanka and then between Pakistan and India in which the 'Cold' Sahara Cup also featured, we had almost forgotten the form and image of classical cricket. We had more been busy with the end result, not with the means. The sheer force and unorthodox nature of the strokes of the instant cricket had its strong points no doubt but had robbed the game of its grace and aesthetics. As such a Test match once in a while is a welcome sight.

After the recent generous over-doses of ODIs between India and Sri Lanka and then between Pakistan and India in which the 'Cold' Sahara Cup also featured, we had almost forgotten the form and image of classical cricket. We had more been busy with the end result, not with the means. The sheer force and unorthodox nature of the strokes of the instant cricket had its strong points no doubt but had robbed the game of its grace and aesthetics. As such a Test match once in a while is a welcome sight.

After the recent generous over-doses of ODIs between India and Sri Lanka and then between Pakistan and India in which the 'Cold' Sahara Cup also featured, we had almost forgotten the form and image of classical cricket. We had more been busy with the end result, not with the means. The sheer force and unorthodox nature of the strokes of the instant cricket had its strong points no doubt but had robbed the game of its grace and aesthetics. As such a Test match once in a while is a welcome sight.

After the recent generous over-doses of ODIs between India and Sri Lanka and then between Pakistan and India in which the 'Cold' Sahara Cup also featured, we had almost forgotten the form and image of classical cricket. We had more been busy with the end result, not with the means. The sheer force and unorthodox nature of the strokes of the instant cricket had its strong points no doubt but had robbed the game of its grace and aesthetics. As such a Test match once in a while is a welcome sight.

After the recent generous over-doses of ODIs between India and Sri Lanka and then between Pakistan and India in which the 'Cold' Sahara Cup also featured, we had almost forgotten the form and image of classical cricket. We had more been busy with the end result, not with the means. The sheer force and unorthodox nature of the strokes of the instant cricket had its strong points no doubt but had robbed the game of its grace and aesthetics. As such a Test match once in a while is a welcome sight.

After the recent generous over-doses of ODIs between India and Sri Lanka and then between Pakistan and India in which the 'Cold' Sahara Cup also featured, we had almost forgotten the form and image of classical cricket. We had more been busy with the end result, not with the means. The sheer force and unorthodox nature of the strokes of the instant cricket had its strong points no doubt but had robbed the game of its grace and aesthetics. As such a Test match once in a while is a welcome sight.

After the recent generous over-doses of ODIs between India and Sri Lanka and then between Pakistan and India in which the 'Cold' Sahara Cup also featured, we had almost forgotten the form and image of classical cricket. We had more been busy with the end result, not with the means. The sheer force and unorthodox nature of the strokes of the instant cricket had its strong points no doubt but had robbed the game of its grace and aesthetics. As such a Test match once in a while is a welcome sight.

After the recent generous over-doses of ODIs between India and Sri Lanka and then between Pakistan and India in which the 'Cold' Sahara Cup also featured, we had almost forgotten the form and image of classical cricket. We had more been busy with the end result, not with the means. The sheer force and unorthodox nature of the strokes of the instant cricket had its strong points no doubt but had robbed the game of its grace and aesthetics. As such a Test match once in a while is a welcome sight.

After the recent generous over-doses of ODIs between India and Sri Lanka and then between Pakistan and India in which the 'Cold' Sahara Cup also featured, we had almost forgotten the form and image of classical cricket. We had more been busy with the end result, not with the means. The sheer force and unorthodox nature of the strokes of the instant cricket had its strong points no doubt but had robbed the game of its grace and aesthetics. As such a Test match once in a while is a welcome sight.

After the recent generous over-doses of ODIs between India and Sri Lanka and then between Pakistan and India in which the 'Cold' Sahara Cup also featured, we had almost forgotten the form and image of classical cricket. We had more been busy with the end result, not with the means. The sheer force and unorthodox nature of the strokes of the instant cricket had its strong points no doubt but had robbed the game of its grace and aesthetics. As such a Test match once in a while is a welcome sight.

After the recent generous over-doses of ODIs between India and Sri Lanka and then between Pakistan and India in which the 'Cold' Sahara Cup also featured, we had almost forgotten the form and image of classical cricket. We had more been busy with the end result, not with the means. The sheer force and unorthodox nature of the strokes of the instant cricket had its strong points no doubt but had robbed the game of its grace and aesthetics. As such a Test match once in a while is a welcome sight.

After the recent generous over-doses of ODIs between India and Sri Lanka and then between Pakistan and India in which the 'Cold' Sahara Cup also featured, we had almost forgotten the form and image of classical cricket. We had more been busy with the end result, not with the means. The sheer force and unorthodox nature of the strokes of the instant cricket had its strong points no doubt but had robbed the game of its grace and aesthetics. As such a Test match once in a while is a welcome sight.

After the recent generous over-doses of ODIs between India and Sri Lanka and then between Pakistan and India in which the 'Cold' Sahara Cup also featured, we had almost forgotten the form and image of classical cricket. We had more been busy with the end result, not with the means. The sheer force and unorthodox nature of the strokes of the instant cricket had its strong points no doubt but had robbed the game of its grace and aesthetics. As such a Test match once in a while is a welcome sight.

After the recent generous over-doses of ODIs between India and Sri Lanka and then between Pakistan and India in which the 'Cold' Sahara Cup also featured, we had almost forgotten the form and image of classical cricket. We had more been busy with the end result, not with the means. The sheer force and unorthodox nature of the strokes of the instant cricket had its strong points no doubt but had robbed the game of its grace and aesthetics. As such a Test match once in a while is a welcome sight.

After the recent generous over-doses of ODIs between India and Sri Lanka and then between Pakistan and India in which the 'Cold' Sahara Cup also featured, we had almost forgotten the form and image of classical cricket. We had more been busy with the end result, not with the means. The sheer force and unorthodox nature of the strokes of the instant cricket had its strong points no doubt but had robbed the game of its grace and aesthetics. As such a Test match once in a while is a welcome sight.

After the recent generous over-doses of ODIs between India and Sri Lanka and then between Pakistan and India in which the 'Cold' Sahara Cup also featured, we had almost forgotten the form and image of classical cricket. We had more been busy with the end result, not with the means. The sheer force and unorthodox nature of the strokes of the instant cricket had its strong points no doubt but had robbed the game of its grace and aesthetics. As such a Test match once in a while is a welcome sight.

After the recent generous over-doses of ODIs between India and Sri Lanka and then between Pakistan and India in which the 'Cold' Sahara Cup also featured, we had almost forgotten the form and image of classical cricket. We had more been busy with the end result, not with the means. The sheer force and unorthodox nature of the strokes of the instant cricket had its strong points no doubt but had robbed the game of its grace and aesthetics. As such a Test match once in a while is a welcome sight.

After the recent generous over-doses of ODIs between India and Sri Lanka and then between Pakistan and India in which the 'Cold' Sahara Cup also featured, we had almost forgotten the form and image of classical cricket. We had more been busy with the end result, not with the means. The sheer force and unorthodox nature of the strokes of the instant cricket had its strong points no doubt but had robbed the game of its grace and aesthetics. As such a Test match once in a while is a welcome sight.

After the recent generous over-doses of ODIs between India and Sri Lanka and then between Pakistan and India in which the 'Cold' Sahara Cup also featured, we had almost forgotten the form and image of classical cricket. We had more been busy with the end result, not with the means. The sheer force and unorthodox nature of the strokes of the instant cricket had its strong points no doubt but had robbed the game of its grace and aesthetics. As such a Test match once in a while is a welcome sight.

After the recent generous over-doses of ODIs between India and Sri Lanka and then between Pakistan and India in which the 'Cold' Sahara Cup also featured, we had almost forgotten the form and image of classical cricket. We had more been busy with the end result, not with the means. The sheer force and unorthodox nature of the strokes of the instant cricket had its strong points no doubt but had robbed the game of its grace and aesthetics. As such a Test match once in a while is a welcome sight.

After the recent generous over-doses of ODIs between India and Sri Lanka and then between Pakistan and India in which the 'Cold' Sahara Cup also featured, we had almost forgotten the form and image of classical cricket. We had more been busy with the end result, not with the means. The sheer force and unorthodox nature of the strokes of the instant cricket had its strong points no doubt but had robbed the game of its grace and aesthetics. As such a Test match once in a while is a welcome sight.

After the recent generous over-doses of ODIs between India and Sri Lanka and then between Pakistan and India in which the 'Cold' Sahara Cup also featured, we had almost forgotten the form and image of classical cricket. We had more been busy with the end result, not with the means. The sheer force and unorthodox nature of the strokes of the instant cricket had its strong points no doubt but had robbed the game of its grace and aesthetics. As such a Test match once in a while is a welcome sight.

After the recent generous over-doses of ODIs between India and Sri Lanka and then between Pakistan and India in which the 'Cold' Sahara Cup also featured, we had almost forgotten the form and image of classical cricket. We had more been busy with the end result, not with the means. The sheer force and unorthodox nature of the strokes of the instant cricket had its strong points no doubt but had robbed the game of its grace and aesthetics. As such a Test match once in a while is a welcome sight.

After the recent generous over-doses of ODIs between India and Sri Lanka and then between Pakistan and India in which the 'Cold' Sahara Cup also featured, we had almost forgotten the form and image of classical cricket. We had more been busy with the end result, not with the means. The sheer force and unorthodox nature of the strokes of the instant cricket had its strong points no doubt but had robbed the game of its grace and aesthetics. As such a Test match once in a while is a welcome sight.

After the recent generous over-doses of ODIs between India and Sri Lanka and then between Pakistan and India in which the 'Cold' Sahara Cup also featured, we had almost forgotten the form and image of classical cricket. We had more been busy with the end result, not with the means. The sheer force and unorthodox nature of the strokes of the instant cricket had its strong points no doubt but had robbed the game of its grace and aesthetics. As such a Test match once in a while is a welcome sight.

After the recent generous over-doses of ODIs between India and Sri Lanka and then between Pakistan and India in which the 'Cold' Sahara Cup also featured, we had almost forgotten the form and image of classical cricket. We had more been busy with the end result, not with the means. The sheer force and unorthodox nature of the strokes of the instant cricket had its strong points no doubt but had robbed the game of its grace and aesthetics. As such a Test match once in a while is a welcome sight.

After the recent generous over-doses of ODIs between India and Sri Lanka and then between Pakistan and India in which the 'Cold' Sahara Cup also featured, we had almost forgotten the form and image of classical cricket. We had more been busy with the end result, not with the means. The sheer force and unorthodox nature of the strokes of the instant cricket had its strong points no doubt but had robbed the game of its grace and aesthetics. As such a Test match once in a while is a welcome sight.

Unconquered hero

Tawfiq Aziz Khan name in the record books as a batsman completing his first half century in Test cricket and also equalling the last-wicket world-record partnership in a difficult situation and also against a mighty bowling attack of the South Africans.

Long ago I heard the commentators describing the batting of Deepak Sodhan at the Eden Gardens against Pakistan in December 1952 over the radio. Those days one had to depend on Radio only in the absence of direct telecast. I distinctly remember when Sodhan came to the crease the Indians were in a good position and Pakistan's limited attack was fired. Moreover Sodhan, being a left-hander, had the advantage over the bowlers who found it difficult to bowl to a good line. Sodhan hammered the bowling and got his hundred on debut. Unfortunately, he was never heard of anymore. Mahmood scored his maiden ton at a more difficult situation and against a more powerful opponent. He came back with the ball claimed the opposing captain Cronje as his first Test victim and then picked up the important wicket of Shaun Pollock.

And once again he had to hold the helm of the sinking Pakistani boat firmly and remained unbeaten with a half-century. In fact this medium-built youngster remained unconquered by the mighty South Africans.

Charles Bannerman, the illustrious Australian scored the first Test hundred in the first ever Test played between Australia and England in 1876-77 at Melbourne and remained unbeaten on 165, incidentally this was Bannerman's only century in Test matches. Unfortunately he played only 3 Tests and finished with an average of 39.75.

Only last year Mohammad Wasim scored a debut ton and since then he had been in the 'oldrums'. The Indian cricketer scored a century on debut against South Africa in South Africa. He too had a very individual form. He was out of form for a long time to come.

Azhar Mahmood will be a good player for a long time to come.

Azhar Mahmood was at the crease. His batting was as erect as his stance and this had a soothing effect on the eyes of the beholder. These days a straight-bat to the bowler was almost a dying art. Naqvi deserved all credit for his excellent innings.

But coming down at number 8 in a difficult situation for his team Azhar Mahmood set an example for all young cricketers to learn what concentration, determination, humility and a straight bat could do. He had all the temperament of an opening batsman, showed that he possessed a pair of discerning eyes, could select the bad deliveries for strokes and had the confidence and ability to guide his more illustrious and senior teammates. Both Waqar and Mushtaq not only flourished with the bat — Mushtaq had his

After the unbeaten visitors had Wimbledon defender Ben Thatcher sent off after just half-an-hour and the win enabled England to finish six points clear of second placed Georgia in Group Two. Italy were seven points behind.

Thatcher was controversially shown the red card when he clashed with Francesco

Wales, their side packed full of teenagers, finally cracked with just 12 minutes to go against Belgium away in Mouscron.

A superb defensive display ended when Brugge striker Nordin Jabari finally found a way past the excellent Blackburn youngster Tony Williams.

A head butt by Latvian keeper Aleksanders Kilinks briefly sparked their Scottish counterparts into life but the visitors were still too strong with 10 men in a match of high incident at Livingston.

It proved a tale of two keepers at the Almondvale Stadium with Queen of the South's 19-year-old David Mathieson enduring a painful afternoon with a degree of blame for each of Latvia's four goals.

Michael Craig, nephew of Scots' coach Tommy, was the victim of Kilinko's moment of madness which reduced the visitors to 10 men while leading 2-0.

Craig was forced off injured in the incident but, as it occurred in the area, referee Milan Mitrovic awarded a penalty converted by Dundee's Iain Anderson after 32 minutes.

And it was Craig's replacement, substitute David Graham of Rangers, who levelled the scores after 44 minutes with a close range effort.

Unidentified English soccer fan is arrested by the Italian police for attacking an Italian man and his son on a train in Rome on Saturday.

Unidentified English soccer fan is arrested by the Italian police for attacking an Italian man and his son on a train in Rome on Saturday.

Unidentified English soccer fan is arrested by the Italian police for attacking an Italian man and his son on a train in Rome on Saturday.

Unidentified English soccer fan is arrested by the Italian police for attacking an Italian man and his son on a train in Rome on Saturday.

Unidentified English soccer fan is arrested by the Italian police for attacking an Italian man and his son on a train in Rome on Saturday.

Unidentified English soccer fan is arrested by the Italian police for attacking an Italian man and his son on a train in Rome on Saturday.

Unidentified English soccer fan is arrested by the Italian police for attacking an Italian man and his son on a train in Rome on Saturday.

Unidentified English soccer fan is arrested by the Italian police for attacking an Italian man and his son on a train in Rome on Saturday.

Unidentified English soccer fan is arrested by the Italian police for attacking an Italian man and his son on a train in Rome on Saturday.

Unidentified English soccer fan is arrested by the Italian police for attacking an Italian man and his son on a train in Rome on Saturday.

Unidentified English soccer fan is arrested by the Italian police for attacking an Italian man and his son on a train in Rome on Saturday.

Unidentified English soccer fan is arrested by the Italian police for attacking an Italian man and his son on a train in Rome on Saturday.

Unidentified English soccer fan is arrested by the Italian police for attacking an Italian man and his son on a train in Rome on Saturday.

Unidentified English soccer fan is arrested by the Italian police for attacking an Italian man and his son on a train in Rome on Saturday.

Unidentified English soccer fan is arrested by the Italian police for attacking an Italian man and his son on a train in Rome on Saturday.

Unidentified English soccer fan is arrested by the Italian police for attacking an Italian man and his son on a train in Rome on Saturday.

Unidentified English soccer fan is arrested by the Italian police for attacking an Italian man and his son on a train in Rome on Saturday.

Unidentified English soccer fan is arrested by the Italian police for attacking an Italian man and his son on a train in Rome on Saturday.

Unidentified English soccer fan is arrested by the Italian police for attacking an Italian man and his son on a train in Rome on Saturday.

Unidentified English soccer fan is arrested by the Italian police for attacking an Italian man and his son on a train in Rome on Saturday.

The Daily Star TV Guide. A comprehensive grid listing TV programs for various channels including BBC, STAR PLUS, CHANNEL V, PTV, EL TV, ATN, ZEE TV, ZEE CINEMA, and ESPN. It includes program titles, start times, and channel information.