Session jam grips RU

RAJSHAH. Nov 3: Once the cause of session jam in the Rajshahi University was terrorism, now it is mainly for delay in publishing the results of any examination, reports UNB.

A recent observation revealed that the session jam in different departments of the university was not reduced during the last two years.

Although any major unscheduled closing of the university was not declared during the period, the publishing of the results of most of the departments took, on an average, 11 months time.

As a result, the session jams for the last four years remained unchanged in the university.

Some of the departments, including Psychology, Social Welfare, Bangla, Management, Statistic and Sociology took 12 months to 16 months to publish the results of different examinations, varsity sources said.

The results of the final year of 1993 batch of Social Welfare Department were published after 16 months.

As per University Calendar volume-2, the results of any examination should have to be published within 90 days of holding of the exams.

But, practically, only Physics, Applied Physics and Pharmacy departments are publishing their respective results in due time, the sources added.

It is alleged that the results have been delayed due mainly to negligence of many teachers who remained absent for days after receiving the answer scripts.

Acid thrown on housewife
