President says

Political stability a must for social advancement

President Justice Shahabuddin Ahmed yesterday underlined the urgency of political stability for the advancement of the society and the participation of the people in development activities, reports UNB.

"Political stability is essential for adopting lasting pro-people development strategies that can provide people with employment, proper healthcare and environmental protection," he said inaugurating a international conference here this morning.

Bangladesh Sociological Association (BSA) organised the three-day First International Sociological Conference 1997 and the Biennial National Conference of the Association at the Osmani Memorial Hall.

The President said people's empowerment, appropriate healthcare and sustainable development are the 'foremost challenges facing South Asia today'. To address the challenges, congenial and favourable infrastructural base is necessary.

He suggested that administrative system should also be developed to ensure participation of the people in development activities and to guarantee their access to better health-care facilities.

President Shahabuddin said the people of Bangladesh, in common with most of the people of South Asia, have experienced in the past little or no improvement in their quality of life.

"We are facing greater pressures from alarming population growth which is causing environmental crisis and unpredictable mutations of the global economy."

Expressing concern, the President said healthcare facilities of the people are inadequate and the environment is fast deteriorating, causing health hazards which require immediate attention.

"The economic development is a pre-requisite to all such conditions which require a comprehensive policy for eliminating poverty, ensuring education to all and making the people conscious of their environment and social commitment."

He said the obstacles to sustainable development are not mainly technical, but also social, institutional and political. Social aptitude, pro-people administrative set up and overall political will are essential to overcome the technical obstacles.
