England looked certain to hold on for a draw at 295-3 but then slumped to 321 all out losing their final seven wickets for 26 runs — as veteran pace bowler Courtney Walsh finished with 4-80. Rain, followed by Hussain's century and an unbeaten 84 from Graham Thorpe, could have saved England from defeat, but the tourists' resolve simply crumpled when the home side put on the pressure.

Rain prevented any play before lunch on the final day and Hussain and Thorpe then set about the West Indies' attack in the middle session.

England resumed after the lunch break at 173 for three and moved comfortably to 275 for three by tea.

Hussain completed his sixth Test century but was then foolishly run out early in the final session, sparking England's sad collapse. The loss was the 19 defeat of Atherton's 52 Tests in charge of England. The end came with 6.4 overs remaining when last man Phil Tufnell popped up a simple catch to short leg. SCOREBOARD

Odds in favour of Nasser

LONDON, Mar 25: Nasser Hussain has been installed by bookmakers William Hill as favourite to succeed Michael Atherton as England cricket captain, reports Reuters.

Hussain is the even money favourite, followed by Alec Stewart at 2-1 Mark Ramprakash on 7-2 and one-day skipper Adam Hollioake at 7-1.

However, former captain Bob Willis forecast today that Stewart, 34, would get the job but felt England should look elsewhere in the longer term.

Wills told BBC Radio 5 "I would look further afield than Alec, but I think that the England selectors will make him captain for 12-18 months."

Simmons recalled for ODIs Mike lets leadership go ST JOHN'S, Antigua, Mar 25: Michael Atherton, who has captained England a record 52 times in Tests, quit on Tuesday, reports to Australia that winter with

He announced his resignation immediately after his side had lost their last seven wickets for only 26 runs to lose the sixth and final Test against West Indies by an innings and 52 runs.

West Indies won the series 3-

Although he has been under intense pressure in the Caribbean because of his own poor form, Atherton said the captaincy had never been a burden to him.

Reading from a statement within minutes of England's capitulation in the Antigua Test, Atherton said: "After much consideration and after discussions with David Graveney, chairman of the selectors, I have decided to step down as England captain with immediate effect.

"A combination of our failure to win this series and my own form, which has been well below my previous standards. has led me to believe it is time for someone else to lead the Atherton said he would remain with the England squad for the five one-day matches against West Indies and intended to fight for his place as a batsman.

"Having captained the side for the past four and a half years I have given the job my full commitment. It has been an intensely challenging and always enjoyable period

"I am keen to remain part of the international set-up as a player and I remain fully committed to the England team."

Atherton said he hoped he would begin to score runs again and that he would be worth his place as a batsman now that he had "taken this step."

He revealed he made the decision to quit on Tuesday morning and that even if England had escaped with a draw on Tuesday he would not have changed his mind.

he was caught rubbing dirt into the seam of the ball in the Lord's Test against South Africa. Only a fine by Ray Illingworth, then chairman of selectors, saved him from a ban by the match referee Peter

Later that season he was fined again by Burge for dissent

during The Oval Test against South Africa. Atherton passed the 30-yearold record of 41 Tests as captain set by Peter May at Lord's last summer. The first indication that he might be ready to step down came last summer after another Ashes defeat. He spent a week considering whether he would lead England in the Caribbean and the England Cricket Board were so sure he would step down they made arrangements for Alec Stewart to be captain. At the last minute he phoned Graveney and said he was prepared to carry on leading the side this winter.

Atherton's likely successors include Stewart, his vice-captain in the Caribbean Nasser Hussain, Adam Hollioake, who has already captained England in a one-day tournament in Sharjah, and a team captain Nick Knight.

Tour manager Bob Bennett said: "It has been my pleasure to work with Michael at Old Trafford and England for the past 10 years. During that time I have found him to be totally committed to the game and as captain of England he has always been determined to give the position his total commitment."

England coach David Lloyd said Atherton had "been a rock. I have nothing but admiration for the way he was handled an incredibly demanding job with real courage and determina-
