Four Japanese automakers cut 4300 jobs

TOKYO, Apr 24: Hurt by slumping sales in their home market, Japan's four largest automakers said Friday they have cut 4,300 workers from their payrolls, reports AP.

The biggest cuts were made by market leader Toyta Motor Corp which said it has trimmed its workforce at factories in Japan by about 1,800 employees since March Another 1,500 jobs could be cut by fall if domestic sales fail to pick up, the automaker said. "We can't tell whether demand will pick up or keep dropping," said spokeswoman

Ririko Takeuchi. The company stressed that those cut had been hired to short-term contracts and were not among Toyota's more than 60,000 regular employees. Male employees at large Japanese companies have traditionally enjoyed an implicit guarantee of lifetime employment. The cutbacks were made by releasing the workers as their contracts expired.

While Toyota saw domestic sales drop by 16 per cent in March, the world's third-largest automaker said the situation is not dire enough to force it to lay off regular employees. Robust sales in North America have helped offset the slump.

Honda Motor Co said it has made similar reductions, cutting 1,200 contract employees since December as it has pared back production at factories in Japan by 15 per cent.

"We are adjusting to a shrinking market. We're not in a position to keep employing these people," said Honda spokesman Kazuaki Ota.

No 2 Nissan Motor Co said it has let go 700 contract workers this year, and Mitsubishi Motors Corp said it has cut 600 jobs.

This is the second time Japanese automakers have trimmed their workforces since the economy entered a stubborn slump in 1990. The first wave of cuts came in 1993.

At that time, Toyota eliminated 2,800 jobs and Nissan cut about 5,000. Nissan also closed its sprawling auto-assembly plant in Zama, just outside Tokyo, in the first such shutdown since World War II

Fifth Five Year Plan

Govt wants to generate 5875 MW power

The government has a plan to increase power generation capacity by 3319 MW with the investment of about Taka 100 billion by the year 2002, reports

The Fifth Five-Year Plan (FFYP) (1997-2002), which was released on Thursday said a huge investment can only be possible if the private sector power investors participate in the power generation.

The installed capacity in the power supply system will rise to 5875 MW with the addition of power generation capacity of 3319 MW, the FFYP said. The FFYP pointed out that the government had already undertaken eight power projects with a power generation capacity of 1380 MW in the public sector during the fifth plan Besides, seven power projects with a generation capacity of 1930 MW would be implemented by the private sector during the same period, it added.

The FFYP said power being the basic infrastructure for higher level of economic growth, the high demand forecast of 4051 MW by the terminal year of the fifth plan has been envisaged.

To meet the demand, public sector investment will not be adequate, the FFYP said adding considerable private investment will be needed.

The eight power projects un-dertaken under the public sector are 210 MW Ghorashal Thermal Power Station extension (6th unit), 210 MW Siddhirganj Thermal Power Station, 109 MW Haripur Combined Cycle Power Plant, 60 MW Shahjibazar Gas Turbine, 210 MW Chittagong Thermal Power Station (2nd unit). Sylhet 90 MW Combined Cycle Power Plant (2nd unit), Barapukuria 300 MW coal based Thermal Power Station and East Zone 200 MW Gas Turbine.

The FFYP said if the private sector does not come forward in time, the government will go for alternative ways and means in the shortest possible time to meet the anticipated demand.

Minister tells conference Indian govt won't allow monopoly in any sector

NEW DELHI, Apr 24: Indian Finance Minister Yashwant Sinha today said the government would not allow a monopoly in either the public or the private sector, reports

Sinha told a conference on the "Agenda of the new government" here that "days of licences and quotas are over ... we must work in a free atmosphere.

India began a liberalisation programme in June 1991 and since then the free-market reforms have attracted more than 20 billion dollars of foreign investment.

The reforms have slowed in recent years, however, as concerns have risen that Indian industry, much of it nationalised, could be swamped by overseas competitors.

State-run companies still continue to dominate the economy spanning sectors such as telecommunications, aviation, defence, shipping, banking, insurance and power.

Sinha, a member of a Hindu nationalist led government, said there was a tremendous interest among foreign investors to invest in India "to help achieve a growth rate of eight per cent or more."

There are certain critical areas where foreign direct investment can play a crucial

He told the Indian industry to evolve a "consensus within itself on economic issues so that 'a national consensus on economic policies could be built

The Indian industry has been divided over the issue of free-market reforms as some businesses have called for more protectionism while others want further dismantling of government controls.

Sinha, unveiling an interim budget last month, said the economic growth during fiscal 1998 would be five per cent rather than the seven per cent forecast by the previous coalition government.

Reforms of state firms

14m workers laid off in China BEIJING, Apr 24: Fourteen million Chinese workers have been laid off as part of reforms of state firms, and the unemployment rate has climbed to five per cent, the official press reported yesterday, says AFP. The 14 million included some workers who were still counted as unemployed although they may have found new jobs, the China daily reported. Song Changging, deputy director general of the employment department of the state statistics bureau, said 8.6 million workers were known to be out of work and receiving minimum pay.

Song said the real unemployment rate was close to five per cent instead of the 3.1 per cent announced at the end of last year. Some 110 million Chinese are employed by state "Things will be hard if the rate goes beyond six per cent, because China lacks a sound social insurance system." Song was quoted as saying.

He added that the rate would go above five per cent in coming years "but that is unlikely to incur social instability.

On top of redundant state workers, China had another 5.5 million unemployed workers in its main cities. The unemployment rate does not cover rural areas but the authorities admit there is a "floating population" of at least 120 million peasants in major cities looking for

Song said there was a huge labour reserve that would have to accept there was no full time employment and that the country would have to allow job sharing. On Tuesday, professor Hu

Angang of the Chinese Academy of Sciences estimated the real number of unemployed at between 13 million and 15 mil lion people and that it would rise to between 15 million and 18 million people in 1999.

He told the world economic forum in Beijing the unemployment rate would between eight and nine per cent in 1999.
